A similar question is already raised in reference to America and the Turkish treaty. But regardless of the fact that America never declared war on Turkey, and regardless of the question whether the American people will finally consent to accept a mandate for part of Turkey, it is desired by the Europeans that America shall take a large share in the making of the Turkish treaty, to save them from their own quarrels about it, which it takes for granted would occur if the European nations once more attempted to settle the Turkish question solely among themselves.

Needless to say, it is particularly desired by the Turks themselves and by the Christian populations of the Turkish Empire that the United States shall take a large part in making the Turkish treaty, bringing to the task the application of the Wilson principles.

Thus far nothing definite has been accomplished by the Supreme Council in framing the last of the treaties with the four enemy States. There is only what might be called raw material for a treaty in the shape of tentative propositions by various European States of what they want, each for itself, in territory or control. A treaty based solely on these propositions would be a very "raw" treaty in another sense of the word.

The best solution of all, say some of these European statesmen themselves, would be for the Asia Minor temptation to be removed from Europe for all time by assurances in advance that America would accept mandates for Constantinople and Armenia and then for the conference to frame a treaty in conformity to suit the program for the future.

BLAME THE ITALIANS FOR FIUME CLASHES

Interallied Commission's Decision, However, Fails to Cause Any Explosion in Rome.

ROME, Aug. 1.—The decision of the Interallied Military Commission unfavorable to Italy regarding the Fiume incidents, has failed to cause any explosion of indignation in Italy, as it might have done if it had been rendered six weeks ago.

[The commission in question was appointed early in July to investigate clashes between Italian troops and other elements in the occupying forces at Fiume. No report of any decision has reached this country.]

Popolo Romano simply says that it regrets that the commission was so partial. Only the American member seems to have been unbiased, it says, while the French and British members decided against Italy.

Il Mattino remarks:

"The commission overdid its task as, instead of limiting its investigation to the Franco-Italian incidents, it extended its inquiry to the activity of the National Council of Fiume, which legally represents the city, having been elected on Oct. 28, after the Hungarian authorities had left, and which succeeded in preserving the city from anarchy."

MAY FORCE PAYMENT FOR SCAPA FLOW LOSS

French Minister Suggests Allies May Require More Ships or Material from Germany.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—The Peace Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, which by a vote of 34 to 1 yesterday recommended to the Chamber that the German Peace Treaty be ratified, listened before balloting to Georges Leygues, Minister of Marine. The Minister stated that the efforts of the Government tended toward the recovery of the entire tonnage lost by the French during the war and also the tonnage which the Government had been unable to build in the same period.

Unfortunately, M. Leygues said, part of the guarantee disappeared at Scapa Flow, but the sinking of the German fleet was a violation of the armistice and thus involved the responsibility of Germany, which might be called upon to answer with what ships remained or by the delivery of naval material.

After recalling the rôle played by the French Navy during the war, and especially in the Mediterranean, the Minister said that France could not rival England or the United States, but must have a fleet assuring her naval position.

Former Premier Viviani, who presided, then called upon the commission to vote on the treaty. Deputy Louis Marin, who later voted against acceptance of the treaty, proposed four motions against it. One was rejected, the others were postponed for discussion, and the vote was taken.

PLANE FALLS IN ITALY, KILLING 14 PASSENGERS

Caproni Machine Plunges to Earth from a Height of 1,000 Meters.

ROME, Aug. 2, (Associated Press.)—A Caproni airplane, flying from Venice to Milan today with fourteen persons on board, fell to the ground from a height of 1,000 meters, near Verona.

All on board were killed.

GERMAN LABORITES REFUSE OFFICES

Tell International Trade Union Federation Meeting They Feel Despised.

AUSTRIANS FOLLOW SUIT

Englishman Elected President and Frenchman and Belgian First and Second Vice Presidents.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 1, (Associated Press.)—W. A. Appleton, secretary of the General Federation of Trades Unions of Great Britain, who today was elected President of the International Trade Union Federation, was proposed for the office by Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor. Appleton was chosen by 31 votes as against 18 for President Oudegeest of the Dutch Labor Federation.

Leon Jouhaux, the French labor leader, was chosen First Vice President, receiving 30 votes to 19 for Carl Rudolph Legien, President of the German Federation of Trades Unions. Legien declined to accept the Second Vice Presidency or any other office as, he said, the meeting appeared to despise the Germans. The Austrians also refused to accept office.

M. Mertens, the Belgian leader, was elected Second Vice President. Twenty-eight votes were cast for him, the German, Austrian and Scandinavian delegates not voting.

Mr. Gompers declared later that Americans might accept office in the new organization when the South American membership became better organized.

The German delegates stated today that their defense of their attitude during the war, made at a previous session, had been received badly because it was not well translated. They said they did not agree entirely with the resolution offered by Herr Sassenbach, the German Socialist leader, which was criticized by the American delegation as being "unrepenant," but they said they did not repudiate it.

The subscriptions to the Internationale were fixed at 12 Dutch florins (about $4.80) for each thousand members.

The contest over the fundamental questions of national representation and democratic control of future international trade union congresses resulted in a compromise, adopted by a vote of 18 to 5, with six delegates not voting. The compromise provided that each country should have one vote for 250,000 members, two votes for a half million members, three votes for a million members and an additional vote for each half million members above the first million. Countries having less than a quarter million members would be entitled to one vote.

Mr. Gompers, speaking for the American delegation, accepted the proposition subject to the approval of the unions he represented. He said he did this in the interest of the success and the permanency of the international movement. The British delegation concurred in this declaration. Mr. Gompers demanded that this system of votes be adopted for the remainder of the present session.

It was the expectation that under this system the votes would be distributed as follows: America, nine votes; Belgium, two; Bohemia, one; Denmark, two; Germany, thirteen; Great Britain, eleven; France, four; Austria and Holland, two votes each; Luxemburg, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland one vote each.

GERMANS SAIL FOR HOME.

35 Red Cross Workers Were Prisoners of Kolchak.

A party of thirty-five German Red Cross workers, five of them women, who have been prisoners of the Kolchak Government at Omsk, sailed for home yesterday on the steamship Oscar II. They came by way of the Pacific, and have been in this city ten days under escort of the Department of Justice.

The workers complained over the way they were treated by their jailers. In the party were six members of the Austrian Red Cross, who were prisoners of the revolutionary Governments of Russia for several years. Some of them said Czech troops made Bolsheviki prisoners dig their own graves and then shot them.

FRENCH PARTIES LAY PLANS OF CAMPAIGN

Fall Election Will Determine National Course on Enforcing German Treaty.

WHERE THE PARTIES STAND

"Radical Socialists," Who Are Not Radical and Often Anti-Socialist, Hope to Hold Their Lead.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—The Radical Socialist Party group in the French Chamber of Deputies is now going through a series of party caucuses to devise means to get enough seats in the coming elections to maintain the group's present dominant strength in the new Chamber. French party politics now should be of interest in America and elsewhere outside of France, because the result of the Fall elections for a new Parliament will largely determine the future foreign policy of France, and particularly the attitude of the country toward Germany and the question of revising the German Peace Treaty.

In the midst of all uncertainties as to the future world, one sure thing is that in every great nation for a long time to come there is going to be the issue: Shall or shall not the German treaty be modified to make terms more easy for the conquered nation? The issue will not die with one modification. The pressure will be continuous for years to come on all the allied countries to relent on this or that point of the treaty.

In France the present numerically dominating political group in Parliament—the Radical Socialist—in so far as it has any program is against treaty revision. The next largest political group in France, the Unified Socialist, may reasonably be expected to make a fight in the coming elections on a program that will include giving easier terms to Germany, the withdrawing of French occupation troops from the Rhine, and declaring against the use of French troops for forcible intervention in Russia or anywhere else in Europe. In addition, of course, the Socialists will have the usual plank for nationalization of industries and other sweeping social changes.

Neither Radical Nor Socialistic.

As to the dominant party, the Radical Socialist, now in caucus to decide the best method to win votes, it should be understood that it is neither socialistic nor radical. If conservative politicians of the Republican and Democratic parties in America should be transplanted to French politics they would find the so-called Radical Socialist party in this country most congenial soil for their own notions. This group was once radical, hence the first part of its group title. Its chief reason for being at the outset of its party history was to fight the Clerical or Catholic party. Frequently to win seats in the Chamber in those days the Radicals would combine with the Socialists on the basis of their common hostility to the Church. As a result of the frequency and success of these alliances in such departments or districts as political expediency made them profitable there came to be employed the combination title "Radical Socialists," which by usage has acquired permanency as a party appellation, but it is meaningless and misleading outside of France.

Furthermore, this numerically dominant party has no well recognized principle or set of principles for which it fights. There is no longer anything left of the clerical party but a negligible remnant without power, leadership or following, so there is no big issue on which the so-called Radicals combine. Since the dying of clericalism the Radicals fight socialism and Socialists as often as anything else. During the last five years of the war this lack of party issues has not been felt, for there was only one big issue. Now the parties are forced to find new excuses for existence or revamp the old ones, because the real Socialists have the only political party in France with a thorough organization and a recognized program. They are greatly outnumbered in the Chamber by the vague apparently purposeless group of Radical Socialists.

The Radicals are now holding caucuses and have not yet arrived at the stage of adopting a program or discovering principles but are merely trying to agree on what sort of election tactics will return enough of them to the Chamber to continue the present majority. The task is made more difficult for them by the recent enactment of the Electoral Reform law by which all Chamber candidates of departments will be voted on throughout the department instead of each candidate being voted for or against only in his own arrondissement. So it is a matter at the moment of devising the best electioneering tactics to win rather than fixing upon a program of what they will attempt to do for France after they do win.

New Alliances.

To what extent will they make alliances with the Right or Left? In case of co-operating with the Socialists will they deal with the members of the Extreme Left of the Longuet type or will they go only so far as the Albert Thomas group? These questions have been raised in the caucus and left unanswered so far. The tendency now seems to be to leave the question regarding the alliances with other groups to be settled in each department according to the political conditions in that department instead of laying down a general rule to control the campaign methods of the radical Socialists, making them uniform for the whole country.

One element of uncertainty is what Thomas is going to do. Will he try to get back to the larger groups of Socialists of the extreme left or form a new group of his own? Since he, with a following of forty-tow members withdrew from the Longuet followers when the latter refused to support the Government in the war, Thomas has been practically repudiated by his former associates. Should he decide now to start a new group of his own he would have at least a better showing than the so-called "Independent Socialists," who have a preponderance of leaders with big names like Viviani but no following.

Clemenceau is encouraging the tactics of the Radical Socialists by which he hopes the next Chamber will be dominated by the moderate element in French politics. This in spite of the fact that his present chief enemy, Briand, probably the next Prime Minister, would have the full support of the Radical Socialists. An attempt made at a recent meeting of Radical Socialists to have them commit themselves in advance as being against Briand did not even reach the stage of being voted on.

One incidental advantage of all this rapidly increasing interest in the next elections among the members of Parliament is that they will hurry the business of ratifying the German treaty so they can adjourn and get home to their departments for the campaign. Fence mending is as much of a political industry in France as in America. The likelihood is that the treaty will be ratified this month.

Strength of the Moderate Coalition.

PARIS, Aug. 2, (Associated Press.)—Negotiations which have been going on for some time for a coalition of the moderate political parties of France in the coming elections against both the Royalists and the Extreme Socialists are reported on good authority to be making headway and likely to succeed.

This combination would include the Radicals, Republican Socialists, Alliance Democratique, and Federation des Gauches, whose combined voting strength in the elections of 1914 was 4,725,000 out of a total of 8,250,000, as against 1,400,000 for the Socialists, 1,300,000 for the Royalists and Conservatives, and 800,000 for the Progressives.

The fundamental point in the combination platform will be "Neither Reaction nor Revolution." Such a combination is regarded as almost sure to elect a working majority in the new Chamber.

Premier Clemenceau has given his opinion that consideration of the new financial proposals by the Chamber of proposed new taxes. Deputies should be postponed until after the Parliamentary elections. This was brought out in a report made by Raoul Peret to the Budget Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, of which committee he is President, regarding an interview he had had with the Premier on the subject of the debates on the M. Peret said the Premier declared it had been decided to hold the Parliamentary elections on Oct. 26, and that consequently it seemed to him it would be difficult for the Chamber meanwhile to examine into and vote upon the financial proposals.

Oct. 26 has been chosen for the election of members of the Chamber of Deputies, because the completion of the demobilization of the army is fixed for Oct. 4. The date chosen will be the earliest on which men of every military class, including the class of 1917, will be able to take part in the election. The date for the other elections must be arranged in order to observe legal delays for the inscription of voters' lists, notices and other formalities, and yet allow the National Assembly to meet at Versailles on Jan. 17 to elect a President of the Republic.

Le Temps today gives Nov. 2 as the date for the municipal elections, Nov. 16 for the departmental councils, and Dec. 14 for the Senatorial elections. Time must be allowed for verification of the Senate and Chamber elections and for by-elections where Deputies have been elected to the Senate and this, according to Le Temps, may cause a postponement of the Presidential election for a fortnight. All election dates must be settled by the Chamber of Deputies, Le Temps adds, and that body may object to the Chamber elections being held first, which is an unusual procedure.

AIM TO CURB AUSTRIAN REDS

Renner and Frantz Confer—Ministry Not to Resign.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Dr. Karl Renner, the Austrian Chancellor, and Herr Frantz, the Austrian Conservative leader, have conferred at St. Germain with a view to establishing between the parties of the left and the Conservatives and Liberals a coalition intended to check Bolshevism, the Petit Parisien says it learns from reliable sources.

BERNE, Aug. 2.—The announcement of the impending resignation of the Austrian Ministry, received here from Vienna on Thursday, was erroneous. A mistake in the transmission of the dispatch from Vienna was responsible. The message originated in Belgrade, it appears, and referred to the Serbo-Croatian Ministry.

2,000,000 POUNDS WASTED.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Two million pounds of foodstuffs, shipped to Chicago in 1918, were spoiled, condemned, and destroyed because of delay on railroads or improper handling by the producer, shipper, commission men, or retailer, according to Health Commissioner Robertson.

It included 312,068 pounds of meat, 63,233 pounds of poultry, 148,60 pounds of fish, 85,000 pounds of fruit, 240,553 pounds of vegetables, 102,272 pounds of canned figs, 360,912 pounds of canned fruit, 327,943 pounds of canned vegetables, and 19,572 pounds of eggs.

Dr. Robertson has asked the city Health Department's bureau on food markets and farm products to consider plans for eliminating this waste.

KAISER DEMANDED PEACE IN OCTOBER

THOUGHT LOSSES USELESS

Gen. Groener Said That Ludendorff Had Lost His Nerve Completely.

BERLIN, July 31, (Associated Press.)—A statement by the former German Emperor on Oct. 27, 1918, that he had reached an unalterable determination to sue for a separate peace within twenty-four hours and to demand an immediate armistice, is one of the many interesting revelations of German war diplomacy contained in the "White Book," published at Weimar today.

The book, which contains official documents relating to the negotiations from Aug. 13, 1918, to the signing of the armistice on Nov. 11, is issued by the Government, it is announced in the preface, because the people want to know the truth.

The former Emperor's decision to seek peace immediately, according to documents in the "White Book," he considered necessary because he believed the people both unable and unwilling to continue the war. His conscience was said to forbid him to permit further bloodshed.

More than a month earlier, in September, according to the documents, General Ludendorff heard that Bulgaria had offered to sign a separate peace. In the official discussion of a direct appeal to the United States it was agreed that Washington should be designated as the centre of peace negotiations, as a matter of politeness. Austria was consulted by telephone regarding the proposed appeal.

Hindenburg Pressed for Peace.

On Oct. 1 Field Marshal von Hindenburg telegraphed to Vice Chancellor Friedrich von Payer stating that if Prince Max of Baden should form a Government he would agree to the appeal for peace being delayed until the next morning, but he insisted that the peace offer be sent immediately if there were any doubt about the formation of the Max Government.

On the same day General Groener reported that General Ludendorff had declared that delay would be fatal, that the formation of a new Government should not be awaited, that a break in the military line was possible at any minute, and that then any peace offer obtained would be unfavorable. General Groener said it was his impression that General Ludendorff had lost his nerve completely.

Prince Max immediately inquired if von Hindenburg was unable to hold the front. He received an answer that the army stood by its demand for an immediate peace offer.

Still Prince Max held that the question of peace was premature, but other members of the Cabinet sided with General Ludendorff and maintained that the military verdict must be adhered to, because, if the situation should be made worse by President Wilson's answer, the army would seek to dodge responsibility.

Prince Max inquired of military headquarters if they were aware that peace action under the pressure of military distress would mean the loss of German colonies, Alsace-Lorraine, and part of Poland. Von Hindenburg replied that he insisted upon an immediate offer of peace being made.

Angered by Wilson's Second Note.

Conflicts of opinion continued between Berlin and the army command, according to the documents, up to Oct. 26.

President Wilson's second note on the peace terms brought a stormy protest from the Supreme Army Command, which wanted to break off negotiations. General Ludendorff looked at the matter more hopefully.

After President Wilson's third note, on Oct. 23, Generals Gallwitz and Muera asked for a last opportunity to show that Germany's position was not as bad as it was described, but their attempts in this way to prevent Austria from making a separate peace failed. News of the Turkish armistice followed and, since the Allies agreed to President Wilson's fourteen points, the German people regarded the war as ended.

The White Book points out that wherever an attempt to delay the armistice was suspected troops rose in protest, and all differences between Berlin and the Supreme Army Command were dropped.

Ludendorff Resents Charges.

Aug. 2.—General Ludendorff takes sharp exception to many statements contained in the White Book, particularly the charge that he and his staff were unreliable as a consequence of nervousness. The General declares that it is strange the members of the Foreign Office were so ignorant of the situation.

The second note sent by President Wilson left no doubt in his mind, he says, of the necessity for continuing the fighting. He adds that he and his Generals were unable to assert precisely whether it was possible to hold out.

General Ludendorff says further that Dr. Solf, (Secretary of State for the Colonies at the time) drew false conclusions when he said that he (Ludendorff) could not hold out for three months, for he had prepared new positions tha tcould have been held.

The General also says that Admiral von Hintze, (then Foreign Secretary,) informed him that the reason for the German peace offer was the separation of Bulgaria from the Central Powers and that no mention was made of nervousness. He calls the description of incidents from Aug. 13 to Sept. 28, given by von Hintze, completely one-sided, and says that his book, which is to appear this month, will clear up the misunderstandings of the situation.

SWISS TROOPS FIRE ON STRIKE RIOTERS

Several Killed After Soldiers Are Stoned by Workers in Basle—Zurich Calls for Protection.

BERNE, Aug. 2, (Associated Press.)—Two strikers were killed and five seriously wounded at Basle yesterday during disturbances attending the great strike in that city. Troops called upon to put down demonstrations were stoned by strikers and fired a volley of musketry into their assailants, causing the casualties.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—A dispatch from Geneva under date of Friday says that during fierce rioting at Basle in connection with the strike there troops fired on the strikers, killing nine and wounding a large number.

ZURICH, Switzerland, Aug. 2.—Zurich is in the grip of a strike movement, which has become so serious as to call for action by the State Council at a special session. The State Council decided at this meeting to request the Federal Council to send troops to Zurich.

The Labor Executive Committee of Olten, canton of Soleure, has proclaimed a general strike.

SAY JAPANESE ARE CRUEL.

Shantung Citizens Protest to Peking Alleged Brutalities of Soldiers.

PEKING, July 29, (Associated Press.)—A petition signed by merchants and other citizens of the Shantung district, protesting against what were alleged to be brutalities by Japanese soldiers, was received here today by the Government. The petition said Japanese soldiers were robbing and ill-treating women and forcing Chinese to sell their lands there.

Twelve Chinese soldiers were killed and ten were wounded, according to official reports, in the clash between Japanese and Chinese soldiers at Kuangchengtzu, the terminus of the Chinese Eastern railway, on July 19.

Fifteen hundred Chinese soldiers and a much smaller number of Japanese were reported to have been engaged in the fight, which lasted two hours. Japanese official reports said the Japanese lost 16 killed and 17 wounded. Three police officers were killed.

The incident was said to have originated in an attack by Chinese soldiers upon a railway employe. The Peking Government was reported to have dismissed a number of commanding officers.

GILLEN WILL SELL FLOUR.

State-Owned Mills in North Dakota to Send Shipment to Newark.

Mayor Gillen of Newark yesterday received a letter from William Lemke of Fargo, counsel for the Non-Partisan League of North Dakota, in which Lemke wrote that matters were progressing rapidly in the State-owned mills and elevators and that in a short time he would be able to ship several carloads of flour to Newark. The Mayor plans to sell the flour to the public and would distribute it to the retailers provided they were willing to handle it at a small profit. The Mayor also received a letter from A. I. Patten, who said he represented a prune growing association in Oregon, which raised 150 tons of prunes a year. The association, he said, would be glad to quote prices to the Mayor which would cut down the cost of living.

Mayor Gillen said that he had been in communication with Goverment officials for the sale of a large supply of sugar, and expected to sell it the same way as bacon has been sold the last three days. The sale of bacon continued yesterday and it was said that the supply could not keep up with the demand.

Tchaikovsky Wants Troops to Stay.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Nicholas Tchaikovsky, President of the Provisional Government of North Russia, left yesterday for London. He will endeavor to induce the British Government not to withdraw its troops from Archangel.

NOSKE NOW WANTS AN ARMY OF POLICE

Proposes Schutzmannschaft of Trained Soldiers for Suppressing Disturbances.

MIGHT 500,000 STRONG

Scheme Suspected at Coblenz to Restore Greatest Military Machine in Europe.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COBLENZ, Aug. 2.—Unless the Allies take a firm stand and insist on the observance of the peace terms Germany, it is believed here, will soon have one of the biggest military machines in Europe instead of one of the smallest.

It has been told in these dispatches how Herr Noske, the War Minister, has recruited a force of home guards which now numbers more than 300,000, and which he intends to try to retain by calling them reserve police under the civil authorities. Today the Intelligence Section of the American forces in Germany reports a new effort to add to the camouflaged German army. This is a scheme for a force of schutzmannschaft, or national police, the Prussian Government taking the lead.

The size of this force might reach 300,000 in Prussia alone. Other German States are being asked to raise similar forces.

The new force would be something entirely different from the home guards, which are modeled on the lines of the American National Guard. The new Schutzmannschaft would be composed of trained soldiers, as in the case of the home guards, but they would also live in barracks and be equipped with the latest military weapons "for the sole purpose of being available for the suppression of disturbances." A German report on the plan for the force says:

"It is hoped that the Allies will place no obstacles in the way of this plan."

It is proposed to have as large a proportion as possible in the Schutzmannschaft of non-commissioned officers of the old army who have had experience at the front. The pay and hours of duty would be conducive to encouraging enlistments.

Under the allied interpretation of the peace terms, it is said here, not only this force but the home guards as well are forbidden. Noske professes to believe that by specifying that these "police" will be under the Ministry of the Interior instead of the Ministry of War the Allies will not object.

The allied plans call for a German military force of 100,000 and no more. The German plans call for a prescribed army of 100,000 plus the home guards plus the Schutzmannschaft.

The home guards are to be recruited from men with six months' military training. There are 2,000,000 of them in Germany, and as Noske has enlisted more than 300,000 home guards it is estimated that he can build this militia or reserve army up to 1,000,000. As the Schutzmannschaft may number up to 300,000 for Prussia, this might mean easily 500,000 or more for all Germany.

These men would be in barracks, highly trained, and subject to instant call. Thus the German plan would mean an ever available army of 600,000 men with a reserve of militia. It would be, perhaps, the most formidable military force in Europe.

FRENCH SPY PUT TO DEATH.

Noncommissioned Officer Communicated with German Secret Service.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—A noncommissioned officer, Sergeant De Brabant, condemned to death for having maintained relations with the chief of the German Secret Service at Barcelona during the war, was shot this morning at Vincennes.

BELA KUN OUSTED, MODERATES RULE

soldiers who lacked ammunition and who were harassed by the guerrilla warfare of the peasants. This force was said to have been thoroughly defeated. The Hungarians were said to have surrendered or fled when a Rumanian division crossed the Theiss River at Tiska-Fured. They also took Szolnok, cutting the Budapest Railway.

Stragglers from the Soviet army, reaching Budapest afoot and in automobiles, brought the news of the Rumanian advance. They said that the enemy was only twenty-five miles from the capital.

On receipt of the news from the front, Bela Kun at a meeting of the Soviet, pale faced and with his back to the wall, declared:

"Very well, if you demand it, I must resign. I made the best fight I could."

According to the newspapers Bela Kun, in refusing Thursday the proposal of General Boehm, his Minister of War, to hand over the Government to the Socialists, declared that Hungary would remain a Hungary of Soviets, and the proletariat would defend the system of councils to the last drop of blood, even to the extent of fighting in the streets of Budapest.

The news of Bela Kun's downfall was not made public immediately, either in Budapest or Vienna. Before making it known the new Cabinet went into session to devise means for the prevention of violence. Meanwhile the allied representatives, including Lieut. Col. Romanelli of Italy, began taking steps to protect Bela Kun.

There are said to be few wounded men among the old Soviet troops because of their refusal to accept battle at the front. Their officers were reported to have been undermining their morale for the last month.

The future of the anti-Communist Government at Szegedin, southwest of Budapest, is considered uncertain by those in touch with the situation in Budapest, but it is said that members of the Szegedin Administration expect to have places in the new permanent Government. This new government, it is generally believed, will be finally constructed when Parliament meets.

All Hungarian factions, it is understood, will support measures to obtain modification of the frontiers and to get an outlet to the sea through Jugoslavia.

Hungarian refugees here held a celebration tonight over the downfall of Communism. Officials in Vienna said the reconstruction of the Hungarian Government was expected to improve the situation in Austria, lessening the danger of disorders.

Exchange rates improved today and the customary scramble for the purchase of foreign money, which had become very marked recently, became less noticeable. The newspapers commented upon the downfall of the Soviet as certain to have a good effect on business and to mark the beginning of a commercial revival in Central Europe. Some of the newspapers suggested the formation by the Allies of a Danube Federation, to include both Austria and Hungary.

Captain Gregory a Californian.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Captain Thomas C. Gregory, U. S. A., of San Francisco, United States Food Administrator in the Vienna region, who was said to have taken a prominent part in the overthrowing of Bela Kun, was formerly an attorney here. He joined the "Grizzlies," a distinctively California regiment, but remained abroad as a member of the staff of Herbert C. Hoover.

KUN'S POWER LONG TOTTERING

Fall Hastened by Peace Conference's Warning to Hungarians.

The overturn of the Bela Kun régime at Budapest has been impending for some time. The Peace Conference, as it made clear in a recent statement, found it impossible to deal with him, because of his failure to keep armistice agreements. Likewise it regarded his rule as not truly representative of the Hungarian people.

These facts led the Peace Conference, through its President, Premier Clemenceau, to issue an appeal on July 26 to the Hungarian people to substitute a new Government for that of Bela Kun, pointing out that the lifting of the blockade, economic reconstruction and the granting of peace to Hungary could only be brought about "with a Government which represents the Hungarian people and not with one that rests its authority upon terrorism."

This appeal was not long in bringing results. Colonel Cunningham, mentioned in the dispatches, and other representatives of the Allies were sought out in Vienna by representative Hungarians to whom the allied position was made clear. Communication with Budapest was kept up by wire, and Bela Kun was brought more directly into the negotiations at a late period when he traveled from Budapest to the Austrian border and met there the Hungarians who had been consulting with the Allies in Vienna.

The military situation in Hungary worked in with the desires of the Allies in securing Bela Kun's retirement, as the attack made by the Red army on the Rumanians recently, apparently in an effort by Bela Kun to cut his way through and get in touch with the Russian Bolsheviki, resulted in a severe defeat for his army.

Bela Kun's meteoric career in political affairs began in March of this year, when Count Karolyi threw down the reins of Government in Budapest and power was taken over by the Soviet Government, in which Kun assumed the post of Minister of Foreign Affairs and of which he was the moving spirit and the virtual head.

His Communist régime in Budapest, while apparently not conducted along such drastically repressive lines as that of Lenin in Russia, is reported to have been sustained by methods in many ways similar. A counter-revolutionary Government was set up at Szegedin, with which the Rumanians co-operated.

Whenever a counter-revolutionary attempt made itself evident in the capital, however, the dictatorship dealt with it severely. This was the case early in July, when as a result of an abortive uprising forty youths from the Budapest Military Academy and three officers were hanged. Bela Kun then issued a proclamation declaring that "blood shall flow henceforth, if necessary, to insure the protection of the proletariat."

The Russian Soviet Government was deeply interested in the Hungarian Red régime. Frequent communications were exchanged between Bela Kun and Lenin and the lesser Russian Bolshevist officials.

SENDS OVERTURE TO PARIS.

New Hungarian Government Asks for Relations with Allies.

PARIS, Aug. 2, (Associated Press.)—The new Hungarian Government, through the Italian Mission at Budapest, has sent a message to the Peace Conference asking for the establishment of relations with the conference.

The conference, in reply, said that it expected the new Government to comply with the terms of the armistice, and hoped that the establishment of an orderly Government in Hungary would make possible the resuming of economic relations.

The new Government was commented upon generally in Peace Conference circles today as being moderate, and one that could be dealt with by the Allies.

Virtually all the members of the Provisional Government were said to be Socialists of the Right or of the Extreme Right, and were regarded as temperate in their views. Peter Agoston, Minister of Foreign Affairs, is known here as a moderate. Many members of the Peace Conference are well acquainted with him. His position in the Bela Kun administration is said to have been a subordinate one.

The Rumanian and Czechoslovak delegations sent to the Peace Conference today communications urging the necessity of immediately disarming the Hungarian forces, The Temps says. These statements set forth that the Rumanian and Czechoslovak troops faced the possibility of being forced to resort to military operations to insure such disarmament.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Budapest is orderly today, following the change in Government, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Vienna. Minister of War Haubrich was appointed City Director, and declared martial law. Every one is required to be at home by 8:30 o'clock in the evening, and an order has been issued for the execution on the spot of any one caught robbing or pillaging.

The troops known as the "Lenin Lads" have disappeared.

CABINET SEEKS WORLD PEACE

New Hungarian Cabinet Tells of Aims in Manifesto.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 2.—A dispatch from Budapest announces that the new Socialist Government has issued a manifesto stating that its chief task will be to preserve international order and enter into negotiations with the entente.

A proclamation issued recently by Bela Kun addressed "To All Countries," received here today in Budapest dispatches, protested against the allied economic blockade. The proclamation declared that the Allies, and not Hungary, had violated the armistice conditions, and added:

"We shall persist in our revolutionary struggle. We are not prepared to exchange our liberation from exploitation for a miserable mess of pottage. We are convinced that the entente will not attain its aim, and that the workers will be able to end the hunger blockade established against us."

RAILROAD SHOPMEN ORDER STRIKE VOTE

volved by reason of the fact that their wage and working conditions, under an agreement reached with the Railroad Board, are based on standards as they are adopted in the United States.

"We shall continue to endeavor to settle the demands by negotiation with the Railroad Administration, pending receipt of the strike vote. That will, when taken, simply centre the power for calling a strike in the hands of the committee.

"The first effect of the call for a vote will probably be the ending of the present strike, which has taken out a considerable number of shopmen over various sections of the country who have been impatient of the long delay that so far intervened. Their walkouts have been unauthorized, and we expect that they will return when they see that the organizations intend action in a united fashion."

International unions of machinists, blacksmiths and helpers, boilermakers and helpers, sheet metal workers, electrical workers, and railway carmen of America are involved in the controversy.

Strike Continues to Spread.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—More than 250,000 railway shopmen of the country are idle tonight, according to statements of leaders of the Federated Railway Shopmen's Union after receiving reports form all sections. The officials said the strike is spreading, with no indication of immediate settlement.

John D. Saunders, Secretary, declared the men will remain on strike until their demands for 85 cents an hour for machinists and 60 cents for helpers are granted. He said that regardless of what the international officers of the various unions may be doing at Washington, the rank and file of the men have determined not to recede from their demands, with back pay to Jan. 1.

Advices received by the union show that, on the Southeastern lines 36,000 men are out, Mr. Saunders said. These reports also show that at Chicago all men of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy are out, in addition to those on several small roads, both in Chicago and in nearby towns of Indiana and Michigan.

The reports list the number of men idle on the Ann Arbor road at 6,000; Pennsylvania lines in Chicago and Altoona, Penn., 30,000; Norfolk & Western, 10,000; roads in the northwest, 7,000, and Chicago & Northwestern in Chicago, 3,000.

Approximately 700 railway shopmen in the Rock Island yards at Valley Junction, Iowa, near Des Moines, went on strike today.

All shopmen at the Wabash shops went on strike at Decatur, Ill., this morning. It is estimated that between 1,200 and 1,500 men are out. The shops serve the Decatur division of the Wabash, the heart of the system between Chicago and St. Louis, and between Detroit and St. Louis, and is the terminal of the main line to Kansas City.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad shops at Halleyville, Okla., a division point near McAlester, Okla., closed today. Three hundred men failed to report for work.

Freight traffic on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad into and out of Fort Worth, Texas, was suspended today because of the strike of 700 shopmen. All repair work here has ceased.

More than 600 employes of the Great Northern Railway shops and roundhouse at Havre, Mon., quit work today.

Virtually the entire force of 1,500 workers at the Atlantic Coast Line shops at Waycross, Ga., went on strike today.

While the night shift of machinists at the Baltimore & Ohio Shops at Cumberland, Md., struck last night for an increase from 68 to 85 cents an hour, two-thirds of the day force was at work, it was stated at the shops this morning.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 2.—Every effort of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers is being expended today to cause electrical workers who have gone on strike with railroad shopmen to return to work at once, according to Charles P. Ford, Secretary of the Electrical Workers International Union. About 400 men affiliated with this craft have gone back to their jobs in Chicago, Mr. Ford stated this afternoon. The strike, he said, is unauthorized.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Union railroad shopmen of the local district of the New York, New Haven & Hartford, at a mass meeting tonight voted, unanimously to strike on Thursday unless their demands for 85 cents an hour for machinists and 60 cents for helpers are granted. The men, who said they had received appeals from the Chicago union to join in a general strike, disregarded the advice of their international officers by voting to strike.

FOES OF LEAGUE MUCH DIVIDED

Program of "Mild Reservations" Emphasizes Split in Republican Ranks.

LODGE TO SEEK COMPROMISE

Conference Will Be Held This Week in Effort to Reach Basis of Agreement.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Although the seven "mild reservationists" in the Senate hope that the four reservations which they have drawn up as a part of the resolution for ratification of the Versailles Treaty will form the basis of settlement of the controversy over the League covenant, there are differences of opinion among Republican leaders as to the efficacy of their program.

Senator Lodge, the majority leader, would not commit himself today on the possibility of a compromise off the lines proposed by the "mild reservationists." He is waiting for conferences of Senators next week, when these reservations will be taken up. He is anxious for an early understanding among the factions of League opponents, but faces a difficult task.

Mr. Lodge has to consider radical opponents of the League, such as Borah, Johnson, Moses, Poindexter, and Brandegee, with their insistence on drastic reservations; the conservative element, comprising twenty or thirty Senators who incline toward less drastic proposals, and the seven Senators who have drafted the four "mild" reservations.

Mr. Lodge was said today to be convinced that the League opposition in the end would put through some emphatic reservations. He favors those outlined by ex-Senator Root, which some Senators think, would send the treaty back to the Paris Conference for reconsideration.

Some Senators argue that the mild reservations, particularly those relating to Article X. and to withdrawal from the League on two years' notice, with the United States to have the say instead of the League Council whether its obligations have been fulfilled, would necessitate recommitting the treaty. They point out that the plan evolved by the seven Senators contemplates having the reservations made a part of the treaty.

Radical Senators were disposed to frown on the suggested reservations by the seven Senators as to Article X, the Monroe Doctrine and domestic matters as not being explicit enough. They want reservations that will declare that the United States will permit no interference by the League Council with any of those questions.

"The only way to deal with Article X," said Senator Borah today, "is to take it out of the League covenant. Any effort to modify or mollify it by interpretation or construction will prove wholly ineffective. As those who attempt it go farther they find that the only way to deal with it, from an intellectually honest viewpoint, is to eliminate it."

Several conservative Senators expressed the view that the "mild reservations" would be considered and revised to make them acceptable to the opponents of the League. They thought that the seven Senators would go further on reservations if they found it was expedient. Senator Capper was reported today as favoring the "mild reservations." He is said, however, to be willing to vote for more drastic ones if the majority agrees to them.

Senators were interested today in the possible outcome of the conference of Levi Cooke, counsel for whisky interests, with Senator Hitchcock yesterday at the Capitol. Senator Hitchcock is said to have told Mr. Cooke that not until the treaty had been ratified and signed by the President and the army demobilized could the ban on whisky and other alcoholic drinks under the wartime prohibition law be ended. The impression gathered by Mr. Cooke, it was stated, was that removal of the ban might be expedited if "wet" Senators supported the treaty. But "wet" Senators observed that they would not be influenced to vote for the treaty by any hint that it might help remove wartime prohibition.

Talk of opposition to the Franco-American treaty was renewed at the Capitol. If the treaty is accepted, some Republican leaders said, a reservation would probably be put through to eliminate the provision that the League Council must approve it to make it effective. These leaders argue that the treaty would be robbed of force if the League was allowed to intervene. Senator Lodge and other conservative leaders are said to favor the reservation if the treaty is ratified.

The Senate adopted by viva voce vote today the resolution offered by Senator La Follette, asking the President why Nicaragua had been allowed to send soldiers into Costa Rica, and why Costa Rica was not allowed to sign the Versailles treaty.

BUTLER LAUDS STATEMENT.

Pleased by New Jersey Republicans' Declaration of Principles.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 2.—Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, who has been mentioned for the Presidential nomination on the Republican ticket, has written to Republican State Chairman E. C. Stokes, discussing the declaration of principles adopted here June 21 at the second annual convention of the New Jersey League of Republican Clubs. Dr. Butler is now on the Pacific Coast, having spoken in twenty-five States, and will soon start for the East, speaking at various places on the return trip. In his letter Dr. Butler wrote:

"The declaration of principles of the Republicans of New Jersey is so complete and so admirable that I cannot resist the temptation to offer my congratulations to you as Chairman of the Republican State Committee upon this notable statement.

"Perhaps never before have the American people been in so great need of specific and courageous declarations of principles on fundamental matters of government and general policy. We have been treated to a surfeit of vague generalities and general phrases, the effect of which has been to befog rather than to clarify the issues upon which the people must pass in 1920. The New Jersey declaration will aid greatly in dissipating this fog. In particular the vigorous statements as to representative government, as to Americanization, as to social reform and labor, merit special praise. The same is true of the sharp criticism of government ownership. What is said about the reduction of taxation, and the establishment of a Federal budget, is profoundly true, and should be emphasized at every possible opportunity from now until Election Day, 1920.

"I hope that not only in New Jersey, but in other States as well, this striking declaration will be both read and studied. It is a genuine textbook of forward-facing and forward-stepping Republican policy."

LEAGUE IS RUSSIA'S HOPE, SAYS FRANCIS

did not have the same excuse, that it was for the benefit of the people."

"I've always believed," Mr. Francis continued, "that Lenin was a German agent. He came from Germany in 1917 plentifully supplied with German money. I don't think this was because he had any love for Germany. He would have used American or British money, but German means were at hand, and he came into Russia because it was the most promising field of any country for demoralizing the army and promoting his plans for worldwide revolution."

Mr. Francis declared he believes Admiral Kolchak to be a man of liberal principles, a real friend of the Russian people, and a real patriot.

In discussing his belief that stable conditions in Europe demand an announcement by the League of Nations of its determination to guarantee the Russian people a free choice of their own government, he said that the message could reach a sufficient number of that people through Admiral Kolchak's Government in the Omsk district, through the provisional Government of North Russia at Archangel, and through the country under the control of the Cossack leader Denekin.

"If we don't do this, if the League of Nations, when formed, doesn't see that order is restored in Russia, Germany, who controlled most of the commerce of Russia before the war and the greater part of Russian industries, Germany, who understands Russian character because she has been studying it for forty years, will exploit Russia, utilize her immeasurable resources and mobilize her enormous man-power until Germany becomes as strong at the end of a decade as she was at the beginning of the late war.

"Lloyd George said to one of his colleagues in the Paris conference that any peace this conference negotiated with Russia left out would be a travesty, because Russia covers half of Europe and half of Asia. Russia before the war occupied one-seventh of the earth.

"I consider Bolshevist rule in Russia a disgrace to civilization and a reflection on those Governments previously associated with Russia, against the Central Powers.

"I think the League of Nations would be justified in saying to the Russian people: 'We will protect you in your efforts to establish a stable Government, that Government to be the choice of a majority, decided by a direct and secret ballot.'

"The League should be ready to back its decision to bring this about with force, if necessary, but I doubt if force would be necessary.

"The Russians are tired of fighting. Men are compelled to serve in the Bolshevist army by a tyranny as relentless as that of the Czar's Government. It is the only means of staving off starvation for men in the cities. They must serve the dictatorship or starve.

"If the decision of the League were given to the Kolchak Government, and to the other anti-Bolshevist forces, there would be enough men in the Bolshevist territories who would welcome the help to obtain their freedom."

Mr. Francis could not see that the Russians had shown any capacity to carry on their industries under Bolshevist direction. He said some of the industries had been working at about half their producing capacity. He declared no merchant of any foreign country would send his products to Russia while the Soviets were in control and stand the risk of having his goods confiscated, and he said a large majority of the peasants did not wish to send their products to the cities and receive pay in Bolshevist money, money "which is run off as fast as the printing presses will work."

Asked whether Lenin had given up much of the original Soviet plan as impractical, Mr. Francis said that there were no signs of this.

"When I went to Russia," he said, "I favored the division of the land among those who tilled it, and so expressed myself at the beginning of the revolution.

"Lenin, two months after he became the head of the Soviet Government, said his greatest enemies were the small land holders and householders. He said in a speech: 'We need have no fear of the monarchists, nor of the bourgeoisie, because they are all subjugated.'

"I would have nothing to do then or now with recognition of the Bolsheviki. They maintain their rule by tyranny and murder. The spread of their doctrines means, in my opinion, the end of civilization."

WILL TALK FOR THE LEAGUE.

Series of Meetings Arranged for the Sub-Treasury Steps.

A series of talks on the League of Nations under the auspices of the League of Nations Association will start tomorrow at noon on the steps of the Sub-Treasury, Wall and Broad Streets, and continue on Monday and Wednesday of each week until action upon the covenant has been taken by the Senate. Gilbert N. Hitchcock, Senator from Nebraska, and William G. McAdoo will be the first speakers. Among those who have accepted the invitation to speak are Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War; Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy; Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Key Pittman, Senator from Nevada; Charles Harwood, President of Brooklyn Democratic Club; Charles McChord, Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission; Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, Judge William H. Wadhams, Lauren Carroll, President Fifteenth Assembly District Republican Club; Miss Alice Carpenter, Rodman Wanamaker, Mrs. William D. Sporborg, and Judge Samuel Seabury.

At the opening meeting Miss Marie Tiffany of the Metropolitan Opera Company will sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" and direct the audience in chorus. The committee to arrange the meetings consists of Martin T. Manton, Miss Alice Carpenter, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Mrs. George F. Kerr, Mrs. Anna Naughton, and Mrs. William D. Sporborg.

THERE are two periods when mortals tell the truth about their age—when they are very young and don't mind, and when they are very old and don't care.

Children are always six-going-seven, and we know a charming woman of eighty-nine who talks continually and coyly of her ninetieth birthday.

But between thirty and sixty, most of us have our little annual sales of Time, at ten per cent off the original figures.

And the practice is altogether sound, for when people misrepresent their age they speak the truth about their hearts, which are ever younger than their years.

Now a great business institution is different—it never misrepresents its age, but proclaims it broadcast and becomes bolder the older it gets!

Because it realizes, when very young, what mortals appreciate only when they are ever old, that the great triumph is to hold on and survive!

Nearly two decades ago some people were writing our epitaphs!

We were the first shop to locate in upper Fifth Avenue. We were so far uptown—imagine it!—that one witty wag wanted to know if the United States kept a consul up there! Still we were not as lonely as Robinson Crusoe. He had only Friday for company. But we had Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday to make good in, and all those splendid years ahead in which we have builded so securely into the heart of the great community we serve!

Then we were only the perspective in the picture of Metropolitan Shopping. But the doubters overlooked the perspective in our hearts—the vision to see ahead, the courage to go ahead, and the resolution to remain ahead in our chosen sphere of activity. Today we are surrounded by many other great institutions which profited by our example. But ours is the distinction of having been the pioneers of what is today the greatest shopping locality in the world.

We came first and everybody followed and is still following

PLAN AMENDMENT TO OUTLAW TOBACCO

W. C. T. U. and Prohibition Workers Getting Ready for a Country-Wide Campaign.

BUT KEEPING IT A SECRET

Fear It Would Hinder Laws for Prohibition Enforcement, Says Report Offered in Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The total abolition of the use of all tobacco within five years is planned by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, according to assertions made today by the Association Opposed to National Prohibitions. The W. C. T. U. will celebrate its semi-centennial March 20, 1924, and according to the allegations by the Association Opposed to National Prohibitions, by that date the temperature society proposes to have Congress submit an anti-tobacco constitutional amendment to the various States.

In behalf of the Association Opposed to National Prohibitions, Representative Reuben Haskell of New York had inserted in the record today a detailed statement asserting that the movement is well under way, and is fostered, not only by the W. C. T. U., but by other prohibition organizations. The Anti-Saloon League, says the statement, because of its affiliation with the W. C. T. U., can not possibly remain out of the no-tobacco campaign.

The Association Opposed to National Prohibitions has been carrying on an investigation, it says, to find out how far matters have gone, and "whether or not the same professional and paid prohibitionists who, by devious and questionable ways, foisted the Eighteenth Amendment upon the nation without a popular vote, are behind the tobacco crusade, despite their eager denials whenever the subject has aroused public comment."

The outcome of this inquiry is thus described:

"There is, indeed, a concerted plan of action based upon a mutual pledge of membership to have anti-tobacco laws enacted in every State in the Union, and, possibly, by Congress in submitting a Constitutional amendment before March 20, 1924, when the Women's Christian Temperance Union will celebrate its 50th anniversary.

"The leadership in this anti-tobacco crusade has been assumed by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, called 'Mother' by the Anti-Saloon League and other prohibition organizations, all of which are co-operative allies in the nation-wide prohibition campaign.

"The Women's Christian Temperance Union began a drive last March for $1,000,000, and has announced that $500,000 of this sum will be expended on its work of 'Child Welfare,' 'Health and Morality,' and 'Education and Information,' and it is under these headings that the anti-tobacco campaign will be financed instead of appealing direct for money to prohibit the use of tobacco."

From Philadelphia was attention first called to the propaganda of the W. C. T. U., says the statement. Dr. P. Charles Green of 2,660 North 16th Street, who is now at his Summer home, Vincentown, Burlington County, N. J., wrote that his son, Charles, an eighth grade student of the M. Ball Stanton School, had brought home for study "Book No. 7, National Women's Christian Temperance Union." Dr. Green carried the matter to the attention of the Association Opposed to National Prohibition last April, in protest against "medal contests" held in the schools for the best recitation and essay upon the "viciousness" of indulging in tobacco. The doctor said the activity of the W. C. T. U. was "pernicious" and should be investigated.

An inquiry was made at Evanston, Ill., where is situated "Rest Cottage," the National Headquarters of the W. C. T. U., and the former home of Frances E. Willard, founder of the order, and the present home of Anna Adams Gordon, its President.

"The headquarters," says the report of the Association Opposed to National Prohibition, sent in today, "is a thriving centre of anti-tobacco propaganda. Thousands of pieces of literature are sent out daily. In one room alone are stored thousands upon thousands of copies of the pamphlet entitled 'Nicotine Next,' by Frederick William Roman, Ph. D., Professor of Economics at Syracuse University, New York. The head of this institution, by the way, is Chancellor Day, a bosom friend of John D. Rockefeller and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who are among the largest contributors to the support of the Anti-Saloon League. But the storeroom of 'Nicotine Next' is as carefully guarded by the seneschals of the W. C. T. U. at Evanston as a safe deposit vault.

"No one but an intimate insider is permitted to know that the W. C. T. U. plans shortly to flood the country with these pamphlets. The reason for all this secrecy about the pamphlet of Professor Roman, who is sometimes referred to as the 'male member' of the W. C. T. U., is that the propagandists at Evanston fear that extensive publicity of their anti-tobacco program at this time may materially interfere with the cause of national prohibition and the bill to enforce it now pending in Congress."

A pamphlet issued to State Superintendents of the W. C. T. U. is quoted by the report as saying:

"Strive to place upon the statute books of your State an excellent tobacco law, with sharp teeth in it, like the one now in Kansas. * * * Protest against sending tobacco to soldiers. It is time that people awaken to the real facts in this craze of sending cigarettes to soldiers. * * * Protest to restaurant and hotel keepers who allow smoking in their dining rooms."

Enough may be gathered from these results of the investigation by the Association Opposed to National Prohibitions safely to conclude that the end of fanaticism is not yet," says the report. "The Prohibitionists are busy with their wonted stealth, going further with their pernicious mission of crushing liberty and confiscating property. The majority of the American citizenry merely laughed when these same bands of self-styled reformers announced twenty years ago that they would make the country dry."

FRENCH MOVIE CENSORSHIP.

Only Those Depicting Facts or Actual Happenings Exempted.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Censorship by the Ministry of Public Instruction of all moden picture films, except those representing facts or actual happenings, is provided for by a decree printed in the Journal Officiel today. The approval of the Ministry must be obtained before the pictures may be shown in public.

A committee of thirty was appointed by the Ministry to examine scenarios and films. The cost of the examination must be borne by the producers, according to a fixed scale.

The decree does not affect measures which may be taken by local authorities along the same lines in the interest of public order.

VOLSTEAD DRY BILL UNCONSTITUTIONAL

beer, wine or other intoxicating malt or vinous liquor for beverage purposes, and further prohibited the sale of any such liquor after July 1, 1919.

"The United States District Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has held that the proper construction of the act of Nov. 21 is that it prohibits only intoxicating malt or vinous liquors and does not, therefore, prohibit nonintoxicating beer. The proposed new legislation would extend these prohibitions in the existing act of Nov. 21 to nonintoxicating beer, and thus make prohibited and unlawful what is not forbidden in and by the existing law.

"These extensions of the act of Congress seem to us to be the real object of the proposed enactment of Title I. under the guise of a legislative construction by a new Congress of legislation by a prior Congress.

"A number of competent and experienced experts of the highest standing and repute, whose affidavits were submitted to the Federal Courts of New York, have shown most convincingly by scientific tests and by practical experiments that beer containing only 2.75 per cent. of alcohol by weight is not intoxicating as smatter of fact, and it should reasonably follow from this showing that beer containing only one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume, which is equal to one-seventh of 2.75 per cent. by weight, would be demonstrably non-intoxicating.

"Not a single scientific test or practical experiment was cited by the Government to establish that a beverage containing as little as one half of 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume could possibly intoxicate, and no finding or adjudication by any court has been referred to which would support the contention that so highly diluted a solution of alcohol could be regarded as an intoxicating beverage under any reasonable and accepted definition of the term.

"It is immaterial that Congress has for many years taxed 'fermented liquors,' containing as low an alcoholic content as one-half of 1 per cent., because that basis was adopted solely for taxation purposes and quite irrespective of the intoxicating quality of the liquor taxed.

"If, therefore, according to its proper construction, the act of Congress of Nov. 21 does not prohibit the manufacture and sale of nonintoxicating beer, the proposed enactment extending the prohibition to nonintoxicating liquors would, as transactions, prior to its passage, be in our opinion unconstitutional and void, because violative of the letter and spirit of the mandate in Section 9 of Article 1. of the Constitution of the United States that no ex post facto law shall be passed by Congress.

"The amendment in the House of Section 1 of the Volstead bill by inserting the word 'hereafter' before the word 'construed' was probably for the purpose of avoiding the Constitution, but it would permit but one construction of the same term as to acts done afterward. But the amendment tends to establish that the true intent was to enact practically new legislation beyond the scope of the existing enactments.

"As to the application of the act of Nov. 21, so extended to future transactions, it will only be constitutional provided its prohibitions can be held to be now, in July, 1919, necessary and proper for carrying into execution the war powers vested by the Constitution in the Congress or in the President as Commander in Chief of the army and navy of the United States.

Congress Has No Express Power.

"Until the Eighteenth Amendment becomes effective on Jan. 16, 1920, the Congress, under well settled rules of constitutional law, has no express power to prohibit the manufacture and sale of beer, whether or not intoxicating. The Supreme Court of the United States, by repeated decisions, has settled this proposition beyond further controversy (Kidd v. Pearson, 18 U. S. 1, 24, and Vance v. Vandercrook, 170 U. S. 438, 444,) and it is equally settled beyond controversy that the national Government can exercise no general police power (Keller v. United States, 213 U. S., 138, 144, and Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U. S., 251, 273).

"So far as disclosed by the published proceedings before the Judiciary Committee of the House or by the debates in the House, there has been no evidence or claim that the proposed enactment in question is necessary and proper at the present time in order to conserve the food supply of the nation.

"The proclamation of the President of Jan. 30 declared that the prohibition of the use of grain in the manufacture of non-intoxicating beverages had been found by him 'to be no longer essential in order to assure an adequate and continuous supply of food,' and this was supplemented by proclamation of March 4, which declared that there was then 'an abundant supply' of food products other than grain.

"Nor was there any evidence or claim, so far as we have noticed, that existing statutory provisions prohibiting the manufacture, sale and distribution of intoxicating liquors in zones or the sale or delivery of intoxicating liquors to soldiers and sailors (which existing provisions are continued unimpaired in and by Section 7 of the proposed new legislation) are not entirely sufficient to protect and conserve man-power so far as may be necessary and proper in any present war emergency.

"The protection or safeguarding of those still remaining in the Army and Navy from the effects of intoxicating liquors can certainly be accomplished under existing laws, and such an object does not warrant depriving the remainder of the population of the country of their constitutional rights and liberties.

"If it be argued that the object is to protect discharged soldiers and sailors in their homes and elsewhere from the effects of intoxicating liquors, the conclusive answer is that such protection of discharged soldiers and sailors is a matter solely within the police power of the several States to regulate until the Eighteenth Amendment becomes effective, and cannot now be regulated by Congress any more than the protection of other civilians in the States.

Cannot Abridge Liberties.

"The sound rule seems to us to be that the constitutional liberties and property rights of persons and their right to carry on a lawful business cannot be denied or abridged by Congress under the war power except in cases of actual and present necessity or emergency.

"The Supreme Court of the United States declared in the famous case of ex-parte Milligan 4, Wall 2, 120, 127, that 'the Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace'; that its protection cannot be denied or withdrawn except in case of necessity; that the 'necessity must be actual and present,' and that, 'as necessity creates the rule, so it limits its duration.'

"In the leading case of Mitchell vs. Harmony, 13 How, 115, 134, which involved the question of the right to take private property as a war measure, the Supreme Court declared that 'it is the emergency that gives the right, and the emergency must be shown to exist before the taking can be justified.'

"The principles of constitutional law recognized in these two leading cases seem to be controlling in the present instance. It is at the present time and six months before the Eighteenth Amendment becomes effective, the constitutional liberty and property right of the brewers of the United States to continue the conduct of their business as long as authorized by the laws of the particular States in which and with which they trade, and that right cannot be constitutionally denied to them by the Congress unless some war necessity or emergency now exists. In our opinion no such war necessity or emergency now exists.

"The assumption or declaration of Congress is not conclusive; a war necessity or emergency does not rise from the mere fact that a technical or de jure state of war may continue, for that might be indefinitely extended and long beyond any actual war exigency, and the inquiry whether such a necessity or emergency is actual and present is, under existing circumstances, a justiciable question for the courts to determine.

Every Evidence of Peace.

"The final terms of peace dictated to Germany have been accepted and the treaty containing them has been ratified by her. The blockade has been lifted, and our Government has given notice in the public press that trade between the United States and Germany may now be resumed, and it is being resumed. The Austrian Empire, after surrendering unconditionally nine months ago, has ceased to exist.

"In the face of these and other developments since the signing of the armistice on Nov. 11, we do not perceive how it can be held by the courts that any war necessity or emergency actually exists at the present time which would warrant the denial to the brewers of the United States of their constitutional right to carry on their business.

"Indeed, the strange anomaly is presented of the House of Representatives impliedly professing in and by the Volstead bill that an actual war necessity or emergency now exists, eight months after the practical ending of the war, in the very teeth of the declaration of the President himself that no such necessity or emergency does exist, as evidenced by his proclamations of Jan. 30 and March 4, and his message to Congress of May 20—more than two months ago—to the specific effect that the demobilization of the military forces of the country had then progressed to such a point that it seemed to him entirely safe to remove the ban upon the manufacture and sale of wines and beers.

"Certainly this latter declaration of the President, made in pursuance, not only of his authority as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but of his constitutional duty to give the Congress information of the state of the union, should be regarded as furnishing of itself almost conclusive evidence that no existing war necessity or emergency calls for the proposed extension of the ban so as to prohibit the manufacture and sale of nonintoxicating beers.

Time of Need Has Passed.

"In our opinion, the constitutionality and enforcibility of the new legislation, and likewise that of any existing war legislation, should be determined as of the date when it is sought to be actually applied and enforced to the prejudice or denial of the constitutional rights of the persons affected. The time of actual incidence is always the test, since the practical and present effect upon the person alleging a grievance is alone the concern of the courts.

"In other words, the controlling justiciable question in such cases always is whether or not a statute sought to be enforced in a particular case does not violate constitutional rights at the time of the commission of an alleged offense. A statute may be constitutional when passed and become unconstitutional by reason of subsequent events. The rate cases seem to us to furnish an apposite illustration and analogy.

"It is true that District Judge Hand and the Circuit Court of Appeals held that the act of Nov. 21, 1918, was constitutional, but, in our opinion, this decision would not apply to the pending legislation. Conditions have meantime materially changed during the eight months since Nov. 21; the President declared on May 20, that it seemed entirely safe to him to remove the bans on beers and wines; he reiterated on July 10 in his address to the Senate that the war had ended last November; the demobilization of the army and navy is progressing, and will shortly be completed; war necessity or emergency has practically ceased to exist, and personal and commercial relations with Germany have been permitted to be resumed and are being conducted."

TO FIGHT DRY LEAGUE HERE.

Head of Liberty Body Pledges Assembly Battle, Too.

By Telegraph to the Editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—I accept the challenge of the Anti-Saloon League as published in THE NEW YORK TIMES of today on behalf of the Self-Determination League of Liberty. This league means to fight every candidate for the Assembly in New York who obsequiously and cowardly bows to the will of that anti-American society. This league means vigorously to support those candidates for the Assembly who will hold themselves responsible to, and who will honestly represent, the liberty-loving people of the State of New York.

Permit me to quote from my statement sent yesterday to every member of the U. S. Senate Judiciary Committee as follows:

"I am in Washington to find out in the interest of the sane and sober voters of the United States what has become of the honor of our country, which our heroic and self-sacrificing soldiers and sailors so gallantly fought to maintain, tens of thousands of whom gave up their lives that autocracy might perish from the earth.

"I am here to learn whether or not intimidation and blackmail upon the part of the forces of evil are to prevail, and I am here to the best of my ability to help save this country from dishonor and disgrace.

"This league is not only opposed to intemperate legislation, but it is unalterably opposed to intemperate people, and will gladly and unreservedly join forces with all those who sincerely and honestly believe in the temperate use of liquor.

"I am sure you agree with me that these are parlous times, and that it is the duty of each and every one of us to do all that lies within his power to save our country from the chaos with which it is threatened. Must we wait until those who are responsible for this travesty of justice (no reflection intended on members of your committee) are forced to flee from the wrath of an outraged people? This league stands for law and order, and its members earnestly and most respectfully ask your co-operation towards that end."

SUES FEIGENSPAN COMPANY.

Test Begun to Stop Making of Beer in New Jersey.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 2.—To determine the constitutionality of the Wartime Prohibition Act, a criminal information was filed in the United States District Court today against the Feigenspan Brewing Company of Newark, charged with making beer containing alcohol in excess of one-half of 1 per cent. The company will be required to plead before Judge Davis in Newark Wednesday.

United States District Attorney Joseph L. Bodine filed the information, selecting the Feigenspan Company because it is said to be the largest brewing company in the State and to have the closest affiliation with the United States Brewers' Association. This action will determine whether beer containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol can be sold in New Jersey.

Decisions favorable to the Government in similar cases have been obtained in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Connecticut. Adverse decisions in like cases have been given in Boston and New Orleans.

OHIO "WETS" ASK LICENSES.

Voters File Petition for Restoration by Constitutional Amendment.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Aug. 2.—A petition bearing the signatures of 142,568 voters, asking the submission to the Ohio electorate at the November election of a constitutional amendment repealing the statewide prohibition amendment, and re-establishing the liquor license system and home rule local option, and defining intoxicating beverages as those containing in excess of 2.75 per cent. alcohol, was filed with the Secretary of State today by L. P. Gibson, manager of the Ohio Home Rule Association.

The Association late yesterday filed with the Secretary of State a petition for an amendment specifically defining a non-intoxicating beverage as one containing 2.75 per cent. alcohol by volume, or less. This petition had 144,000 signatures, or 48,000 more than necessary.

LOYAL POLICE STOP LIVERPOOL LOOTING

Charge Strike Vandals with Fixed Bayonets—Troops Are Called at Mayor's Request.

WALKOUT GAINS IN LONDON

Handful of Recruits Join Disgruntled Policemen—Yorkshire Miners Debate Strike Continuance.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 2.—Looting and rioting occurred throughout the night as a result of the strike of policemen, and the Lord Mayor appealed early today to the military authorities for aid. The latter dispatched six lorry loads of troops from Crosby, six miles from here, all fully armed, while special constables were also called out. The looting continued in the poorer districts this morning, and the Lord Mayor asked for volunteers to help guard the city.

Authorities have followed the example of the London officials in expelling striking police officers. Legal police have made several bayonet charges and half a dozen arrests in the attempt to check looters.

Soldiers with fixed bayonets were stationed to guard property from the looters, the greater part of which occurred during the night, when many shops were broken and looted. The jewelers suffered most at the hands of the raiders. A large quantity of goods also was stolen from the sheds on the docks. The losses, it is estimated, will run into thousands of pounds.

Some of the troops were placed on patrol outside the Town Hall, and others in the Scotland Road area, where the greater part of the looting took place. Six hundred and fifty-two policemen are now reported to be out here and one in London, according to the Government officials. The ranks of the London strikers were said to have gained only a handful of recruits, as indicated by this morning's roll call.

During the day the strike spread to Birkenhead, on the Mersey opposite Liverpool, strike patrols bringing out members of most of the shops of jewelers, pawnbrokers, and other shopkeepers there are being looted.

The Yorkshire Miners' Council, representing more than 250,000 miners who remained on strike, refusing to accept the Government's offer of settlement, decided today to submit to its branches the question of continuing the strike.

1,000 Police Out in London.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—At midnight tonight, according to Scotland Yard officials, approximately 1,000 policemen were out on strike in London and the strikers in Liverpool number 910. Everything is quiet in both cities. At a meeting of policemen at Sheffield the men decided not to strike.

C. L. Sherman Quits Newspaper Work.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 2.—Clifton L. Sherman, managing editor of The Hartford Courant, has resigned, it was announced tonight, and will retire from newspaper work. Mr. Sherman began work on The Springfield Union. He came to the Courant in 1899 and has been with that paper since then, with the exception of five years on the staff of The New York Sun.

"LITTLE MOTHER" IS HELD.

Girl Accused in Death by Poison of Younger Child.

Frances Schmidt, 18 years old, of 230 Georgia Avenue, Brooklyn, was taken in charge by the Children's Society and charged with improper guardianship yesterday, after a child which she had been employed to watch had died at the Kings County Hospital from swallowing a corrosive poison. The child was Solomon Kramer, 1 year old, of 589 Sheffield Avenue, Brooklyn. According to the mother, the child, while under the care of the nurse girl, suddenly began frothing at the mouth on Thursday afternoon. It was taken to the Kings County Hospital, where it died.

Mrs. Kramer asserted that she found a bottle of lysol which had been removed from its usual place on a mantelpiece. Mrs. Kramer said that earlier in the day that the child had taken ill she had reproved the nurse girl for being absent from Tuesday until that morning. The girl wept bitterly when she was found by Detective Doherty, and asserted that she knew nothing about what had happened to the child.

GERMAN RESOURCES ARE IN ALLIES' GRIP

Baruch Tells Senate Committee How Control Is Held by Reparation Commission.

ALL IMPORTS ARE CURBED

Even Production and Foreign Sales Are Subject to Commission's Scrutiny.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Germany's economic and industrial resources are virtually in control of the Allies under the Peace Treaty, according to evidence given before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today by Bernard M. Baruch, economic adviser of the American peace delegation.

"This control," Mr. Baruch said, "will be in the hands of the Reparation Committee, created by the treaty, and so close will the Government be over Germany that no German citizen can buy a dollar's worth of raw material from the United States or elsewhere without consent of the committee."

He pointed out that in addition to control of raw material imports into Germany the commission had complete control over products. It has power to decide what goods, manufactured or produced in Germany, shall go toward reparation.

Senator Johnson of California, after reading the treaty provision under which control of economic and industrial resources is ceded by Germany to the Reparation Commission, asked:

"There is then, practically, a super government imposed on Germany's economic resources, is there not?"

"That is quite correct," said Mr. Baruch. "It is empowered not only to see that Germany does pay, but it is empowered first to see that she can pay."

Elaborating this thought, Mr. Baruch said:

"While Germany's factories are practically intact and she has seen to it through ruthless destruction in France, Belgium, and elsewhere that those of her neighbors are put out of commission, Germany cannot take advantage of this situation unless she is allowed to buy raw materials. Germany lost a great proportion of her own raw materials, (coal and iron ore,) and now she cannot take advantage of the world market unless the Reparation Commission decides to let her."

"We must then rely on the good judgment of the commission to afford Germany that opportunity?", asked Senator Knox.

"Yes, and we expect the commission will see that it is good judgment to do so," responded Mr. Baruch.

"There is nothing in the treaty that prevents a German who has paid his taxes toward reparation from buying raw material in the United States if he wishes, is there?" asked Senator Swanson.

"Yes," replied Mr. Baruch, "until the Reparation Commission is satisfied that Germany is going to make the required payments all deals for raw materials will have to be conducted through the commission."

Senator Swanson thought the language of the treaty did not bear out this interpretation, but Mr. Baruch stated that to prevent the Germans sending out of the country money and securities that might be taxed to raise the reparation fund it was decided to place under control of the commission all transactions that might have an effect on the reparation fund. Under this, he said, fell purchases of raw materials, cotton, copper, &c.

Senator Johnson inquired whether, if the United States declined to share in the reparation fund, the Reparation Commission would credit our share against Germany's bill, or would levy the same amount as if this Government took its share, and then divided the American portion among the allied nations.

"That is a part of the negotiations preliminary to the division of the 20,000,000,000 marks that must be paid by May 1, 1920," said Mr. Baruch. "The commission, of course, might deduct the American share—but that is still to be decided."

"If you fix $25,000,000,000 as German reparation, and our share should be $5,000,000,000, which we refuse to take, would you then fix Germany's bill at $20,000,000,000 or would you still collect the whole sum," asked Senator Knox.

"In other words, would Germany get credit for what we decline to take?"

Mr. Baruch again said he didn't know how that would work out, but suggested that the American members of the commission would do well to learn how this Government felt about it before giving assent to any decision.

Senator Knox said that in his opinion the American commissioner ought to see "that the sum fixed will be on the basis of our acceptance of our full share, and let us do the generous thing by Germany, if we wish, and remit it. I think the impression has got abroad that we won't accept any and that the reparation sum will be based on that assumption and the other allied powers will get the benefit of our generosity."

Senator Knox then raised a question regarding obligations imposed under the cession by Germany of Memel, Schleswig, and Danzig to the five great powers.

"We are included in that list of powers," said Mr. Knox. "The treaty provides that the powers to whom these places are ceded shall assume liability for part of Germany's debt there. Does that fix an obligation on us to pay part of that debt?"

Mr. Baruch replied that his understanding was that Memel, Schleswig, and Danzig were ceded in trust to the powers, to be transferred later to other nations which would get sovereignty over them. The nations thus getting title would have to pay the German debts, he said.

Professor F. W. Taussig, retiring head of the Tariff Board, was questioned briefly by the committee. He said that "in some respects" the American economic delegates exercised a greater influence than any other group at Paris because they were frequently called upon to arbitrate proposals by other nations. He declared that there was no foundation for suggestions that the British delegates "dominated" the financial decisions of the Peace Conference.

The committee will resume its hearings Monday. Norman Davis will be questioned on certain financial clauses, and after him Secretary Lansing is to be called.

ISSUE RHEIMS PEACE STAMP

Danish Project to Raise Money for Rebuilding Cathedral.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 1.—A world peace stamp was issued today in Copenhagen, and 400,000,000 are to be printed for distribution all over the world.

The idea of raising funds this way to rebuild the Cathedral of Rheims comes from a Danish author, Mogens Falck, and committees have been formed in different countries for carrying it out. The stamp is green, with a picture of the cathedral, behind which is the word "Pax" on the sky, and below is the inscription, "Veritas, Libertas, Justitia."

It is hoped that throughout the world in the coming months this emblem of peace will be found generally on letters.

BAKER HAS TRAINING BILL.

Compulsory War Service Measure Before Congress Soon.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The War Department bill providing for a moderate system of universal military training as the settled military policy of the nation will be laid before Congress without further delay. Probably it will be in the hands of Senator Wadsworth and Representative Kahn, heads of the two Military Committees, early next week.

Previous plans for extended conferences with General Pershing and other overseas officers before presenting the bill have been abandoned. For that reason, however, it is understood the committee Chairmen will be informed that while the project included in the proposed measure represents the best judgment of the War Department at this time, it is to be looked upon as tentative in some respects. The department, it is understood, is anxious that General Pershing and his officers should be heard.

Details of the Department's bill have not been made public. There are indications, however, that it differs essentially in some ways from the Kahn-Chamberlain Universal Training bill already before the committees.

In previous discussions of the subject officers who testified held that training should be given in the nineteenth year. Secretary Baker expressed the same views, and it is thought probable the War Department plan will be found to call for the training of youths of 19 instead of 18, as provided in the Kahn-Chamberlain measure.

Another point on which the department's judgment is awaited with interest is the amount of training to be required. This has been a difficult problem. Economic considerations, it has been felt, required that the time taken out of the life of 600,000 or more boys a year who probably would be liable for the military instruction should be fixed at the irreducible minimum of what military considerations required.

REPORT KERR LINE IN DEAL.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Aug. 1.—There are many rumors in Germany and Holland regarding a proposed combination of the Kerr Line of American Steamships with the Hamburg-American Line, although the Rotterdamsche Courant denied these rumors. Another dispatch said that a representative of the Kerr line was expected in Hamburg the next day.

The Telegraaf learns from Berlin that a strike of potash workers is now unavoidable.

POLES MARCHING AGAINST PETLURA

CROSSING ZBUC RIVER

Director of Land Banks Says Ukraine Desires Trade Relations with America.

VIENNA, Aug. 1. (Associated Press.)—The Poles announce a continuance of their victorious march against the Ukrainians. They are crossing the Zbruc River (the boundary between Galicia and the Ukraine) at various points. The Polish army's objective is said to be Kamenets Podolia, which is the capital of General Simon Petlura, the Ukrainian leader.

The Ukrainians recently resumed diplomatic relations with Rumania, having previously sent missions to Italy, Switzerland, Germany and Austria, and are said to be seeking to establish one in the United States. It is predicted here that the Ukrainians are nearing the final chapter of their struggle for independence but, according to the Ukrainians, such a view pre-supposes a settlement of the entire Russian question without their consent. They declare that they, like the Serbs, will continue to fight indefinitely.

Regarding Polish charges that the Ukrainians are favoring German commercialization of Russia, M. Stepanokov, Director of the Co-operative Land Banks, maintained by 14,000,000 farmers, with headquarters formerly at Kiev, said:

"The country above all we wish to do business with is America. It is true that at present French politics is driving us into the arms of the Germans, but we realize that the Germans would attempt to exploit us and also that they have no resources.

"Recently the Germans offered us a very big loan and also unlimited supplies, but we rejected the offers as we felt acceptance would mean the ruin of our prospects in the United States. Foreigners do not realize that 65 per cent. of Old Russia's grain and sugar exports came from the Ukraine and also that we have plenty of leather, hemp, flax, phorchates, quicksilver, and iron ore. We are willing now to buy clothing and machinery, and have 12,000,000,000 'Czar' rubles with which to pay."

LABOR UNIONS FOR KOLCHAK.

Promise Support Against Bolsheviki —Russian Cities Calling Off.

OMSK, July 19. (Russian Telegraphic Agency.)—A delegation from the Union of Labor Unions called upon Admiral Kolchak, head of the All-Russian Government, today, and pledged the Omsk Government the full support of its membership in the campaign against Bolshevism.

The first American Red Cross sanitary train intended for the care of typhoid patients arrived here today. Fever-stricken persons will be taken to the train for isolation as a means of checking the spread of the epidemic. The train is well equipped with supplies.

Petrograd's population, which was more than 2,000,000 in 1912, has decreased under Bolshevist rule to 800,000, according to documents and newspapers taken from Bolshevist prisoners here today. Moscow's population was shown to have been diminished by 40 per cent.

Statistics on production showed that the Union of Workers of the Moscow metal industry, which had 183,000 members before the Bolshevist revolt, now has only 60,000 members. Workingmen of the Putiloff Iron Works, according to these documents, who received 96,000,000 rubles in wages during a recent period, produced in that time material valued at only 15,000,000 rubles.

ESTHONIA GETS PEACE.

Hostilities with the Bolsheviki Have Ceased.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Hostilities between the Russian Bolsheviki and the Esthonian Republic have been stopped, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Copenhagen.

M. Zinovieff, Governor of Petrograd, according to this dispatch, stated at a recent meeting of the Soviet there that it was intended to end the war against Esthonia as soon as the frontier towns of Yamburg, Gdov, and Pskov had been retaken.

Esthonian newspapers were quoted as stating that Esthonia desired peace, but would not be a tool for experiments to re-establish a Russia, whose political physiognomy was unknown and that peace with Soviet Russia was possible only if an understanding should be reached with the powers that assisted Esthonia in the war against the Bolsheviki.

BOLSHEVIKI REPORT GAINS.

Advanced 27 Miles on Northern Front, Their Communication Says.

LONDON, Aug. 2, (Associated Press.)—The following Bolshevist official communication, dated Friday, dealing with the operations on the North Russian front, was received here today:

"We have advanced twenty-seven miles northward of Onega. (This advance apparently is along the Gulf of Onega.)

"We have abandoned Troskurotf and Yampal. We have begun an advance in the region of Astrakhan, driving the enemy out of Vladimirovak across the river at Akhtuba. Many of the enemy were drowned."

SAYS POLISH BLOOD WILL AGAIN BE SHED

Paderewski Expects It, Since Some Territory Is Not Yet Returned.

WARSAW, Aug. 1. (Associated Press.)—During the sitting of the Diet, when the German Peace Treaty was ratified, Premier Paderewski said that he rejoiced that Poland's freedom had been recognized by Germany, and was solemnly confirmed by the allied and associated powers, "although precious Polish blood will probably still flow for territories not yet returned to our patrimony."

Premier Paderewski said the treaty deprived Poland of few kilometers of territory, but granted much from a national point of view.

Eloquent tributes were paid to President Wilson, Premier Clemenceau, Premier Lloyd George and Vittorio Orlando by M. Paderewski, who expressed his gratitude to "heroic, beloved France, intrepid England, chivalrous Italy, always friendly America, and distant, benevolent Japan."

FREES RUSSIAN PRISONERS.

Supreme Council to Allow Germany to Let Them Go.

PARIS, Aug. 2. (Associated Press.)—Marshall Foch appeared before the Supreme Council this afternoon in connection with the discussion of the Russian prisoners' problem.

The council decided to inform Germany that all restrictions on the movement of Russian prisoners held in Germany, had been lifted. Germany may now release such prisoners and will hereafter be responsible for their maintenance.

There are 200,000 to 250,000 Russian prisoners in Germany. They have been a great problem for the Allies, as many of the Russians are Bolsheviki. Poland has been unwilling to allow these Russians to cross Polish territory on their way to Russia.

BERLIN, via Copenhagen, Aug. 2.—Within a few days 50,000 Russian prisoners, who have been in the hands of the Germans two to five years, will start the long journey homeward—from Hamburg by water all the way around to the Black Sea.

The voyage will take four weeks, but it was found necessary because Poland still blocks the way to repatriation of the Russians by the overland route. Only the men from the Caucasus and Transcaucasus can be carried this way. The other 200,000 still face the possibility of spending another Winter in the German camps.

KENTUCKY GOVERNOR WINS.

Defeats Judge Carroll for Gubernatorial Nomination.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 2.—Governor James D. Black of Barbourville defeated Judge John D. Carroll of New Castle for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination by approximately 15,000 votes in today's State-wide primary, incomplete unofficial returns indicated late tonight. Edwin J. P. Morrow of Somerset was unopposed on the Republican ticket.

In the Eighth Congressional District, King Swope, a returned soldier, running on the Republican ticket, was elected over Judge Charles A. Hardin, Democrat, by a majority estimated at from 1,200 to 1,400. It was the first time a Republican candidate ever was victorious in that district. Judge Hardin conceded his defeat by 1,000 votes.

The seat was vacated by the death of Harvey Helm, who had held it many years.

BLINDED BY "BLACK JACK."

Soldier's Sight Goes After He Drinks Preparation of Wood Alcohol

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Aug. 2.—David Carbone of Brabtree, Penn., awaiting discharge at Camp Dix, has become totally blind as the result of drinking what soldiers call "black jack." He thought at first when his eyes began to hurt him that the pain was due to cinders which got into them on the train when he was coming here to visit relatives.

Today when it was discovered that his sight was gone he was questioned as to what he had been drinking. Then he told about the "Black Jack," and this led to an investigation. An analysis showed that the soldier had been drinking wood alcohol with some kind of a coloring fluid mixed in it.

ROOSEVELTS SHARE ESTATE

MINEOLA, N. Y., Aug. 2.—Mrs. Edith Kermit Roosevelt, widow of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, today applied to Surrogate Leone D. Howell of Nassau County for letters of administration on the estate of her son Quentin, who was killed July 14, 1918, in France, in combat with the enemy while flying with the aviation section of the American Expeditionary Forces.

An affidavit accompanying the petition said the personal estate of Quentin amounted to $1,100, and that he had no real estate. Waivers from George Emlen Roosevelt and Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., accompanied the petition as executors of the estate of Colonel Roosevelt, who, under the law, as father of an unmarried son who dies intestate, was heir of the personal property of his son. This releases the estate of Quentin to his mother, brothers, and sisters as his heirs.

FILE 3 PETITIONS FOR NEWBURGER

JUDGE SMITH FIGHTS BACK

Says He Will Seek Democratic Nomination Despite Rejection by Tammany.

The first petitions designating Justice Joseph E. Newburger as the Republican and Democratic candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court at the primaries on Sept. 2 were filed yesterday with the Board of Elections. Two petitions were for the Republican designation, and the other for the Democratic choice.

One of the Republican petitions was filed by the Republican County Committee, which indorsed Justice Newburger for reelection on July 23, while the other Republican and the Democratic petitions were filed by the committee representing the Bar Association of the city.

The petition of the Republican County Committee contained 2,700 names. More than 1,700 names were signed to the Bar Association committee's Republican petition, and the Democratic designation petition contained 2,048 names, many being of men prominent in the Tammany organization who resent the action of Tammany Leader Charles F. Murphy in refusing to Justice Newburger a renomination.

Both the Republican organization and the Bar Association committee will file supplementary petitions tomorrow, as it was said signatures to all three petitions were coming in so fast they could not be tabulated yesterday. It was predicted that the Justice would have one of the largest petitions ever filed in this county.

Clarence H. Fay, Secretary of the Republican County Committee, who filed the petition for that organization, said tomorrow's petition would be much larger, as voters from all over the city were eager to sign the document. He said it would be necessary for the committee to work today and tonight compiling the signatures for filing. Tuesday is the last day on which petitions may be filed.

Tammany Leaders Support Him.

Some of the signers to the Democratic petition, designating Justice Newburger as a candidate to oppose Irwin Untermyer in the primaries, were Charles J. Leslie, Edward M. Grout, George Gordon Battle, Francis G. Caffey, United States District Attorney; Henry M. Alexander, Clarence J. Shearn, Montgomery Hare, Henry de Forest Baldwin, and George S. Hornblower.

It was noted that the petition named the same committee to fill vacancies which had appeared on the petition circulated before Justice Newburger was turned down by Tammany. On this committee were some of the most prominent Tammany Hall leaders, including Senator James J. Foley, who was designated for Surrogate; Morgan J. O'Brien, Ian Godfrey Soxe, David Leventritt, Lancey Nicoll, James A. O'Gorman, and John B. Stanchfield. It was said that many lawyers prominent in the Tammany organization would support Justice Newburger if he makes a contest in the primaries.

The committee to fill vacancies on the Republican petition is made up of George W. Wickersham, Clarence H. Fay, Charles E. Heydt, William H. Ten Eyck, and Thomas W. Whittle.

It was said yesterday that Tammany is continuing its efforts to induce Justice Newburger to withdraw from the primary race. One emissary sent to talk over the situation with the Justice at Point Bluff was said to be Morgan J. O'Brien. The Justice is expected to issue a statement today defining his intentions.

A movement also has been started to have Justice Newburger make a fight in the election against Mr. Untermyer, if he should be defeated in the primaries. A number of lawyers and jurists are said to favor the plan, and if it is carried out an Independent Nominating Committee probably will be formed. The law requires not more than 3,000 signatures to a petition putting an independent ticket in the field. The requirement for the primary petition is 1,500 signatures.

Judge Smith to Make Fight.

Judge Richard H. Smith, to whom a renomination for the City Court also was refused by the Tammany Executive Committee, announced that he would enter the Democratic primaries for the nomination, and his petitions will be filed tomorrow. He said if Justice Newburger would enter the race he was confident they would win, but he had decided to run whether the Justice did or did not.

"I have always been a Democrat, and was nominated and elected as a Democrat ten years ago upon a fusion ticket," said Judge Smith. "When I went upon the bench I ceased taking active part in politics, and determined that my political future should depend not upon my political action, but upon the work I performed on the bench for all the people, irrespective of parties. The indorsement of the Bar Association is proof that I have done this.

"As far as personal friendship is concerned, I believe I have the good will of the men in politics with whom I was formerly associated. And when, in addition to the indorsement of the Bar Association, I received a nomination at the hands of the Republican organization, I looked upon it not as a party indorsement, but as additional approval of my course on the bench. I took it for granted that my own party would, without hesitation, take cognizance not only of my actions as a Judge, but also as a part of the party itself, and that my indorsement by other organizations would be an additional reason why I should be indorsed by the Democratic organization.

"Further, many Democrats of influence in the organization told me of their good will and expressed the wish that I should be nominated, and that they were confident such would be the fact. Furthermore, I received word on the Friday before the nominations were made that my nomination was assured, and that I could go down to my Long Island home over Sunday without apprehension as to the result. It was certainly most gratifying to feel that after having completed a full term as City Court Judge I should receive the indorsement not only of the Bar Associations but of both political parties, and I never felt more at peace with the world than I did at that time.

Battle for Principle.

"Now that the situation is changed I never felt more like fighting. I have fought a good many political battles in my life and am ready for one more. I feel that I am not so much in the fight for myself as for a principle. If Judges can be turned down at the will of political leaders, what incentive is there for a Judge to do his best work while on the bench?

"It has not only been the ambition practically of every lawyer to be a Judge, but also to have his actions approved while he held the position; and this principle has been so well recognized in the past that it has seldom been that political leaders have had the temerity to turn down a Judge whose record upon the bench had been satisfactory to the people.

"I do not believe they will do so in this case. Judge Newburger has undoubtedly a stronger claim upon the people than I have, but we are both fighting for the same principle, and I hope he will see the matter in the same light as I. It is not a fight against my party, as it is not a political fight. It is a fight for principle and for right, and that I propose to make with all the power that I have.

"If Judge Newburger will stay in the race I have no doubt but that our fight will be a winning one; but whether he stays in the fight or not, I propose to stay in until the finish. If I go down in defeat I will know that I have made a good fight and that possibly the future political leaders will be somewhat influenced by that fact. If I win, I will feel that I have done the party a greater service than I have done for myself."

It was announced that Mayor Hylan had appointed Lawrence C. Fish, a Brooklyn attorney, as temporary Judge to sit in the Children's Court in Brooklyn during the illness of Judge Robert J. Wilkin.

SAVE DROWNING CANOEISTS.

Storm Victims All but Exhausted When Taken from Water.

Henry E. Heistadt, a lawyer of 758 East Sixteenth Street, Flatbush, Commodore of the Sheepshead Bay Yacht Club, and Charles Heuthwohl, a broker, were out in a motor launch about two miles from Rockaway Point at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon when at a distance they saw a red awning above the water on a canoe paddle. Arriving at the signal, they found two men hanging to the keel of a capsized canoe. Both were nearly exhausted and had to be lifted into the motor launch. They said their canoe had been capsized by a sudden storm and that they had been two hours in the water, taking turns holding up their signal of distress. They were Frederick Swanson, 20 years old of 3,510 Farragut Road, Brooklyn, and John Gill, 24 years old, of 1,110 Madison Street, Brooklyn.

News of the rescue spread when the launch touched the pier of the yacht club and people crowded down to see them. Eugene Marion, 10 years old, of 25 Patchen Avenue, Brooklyn, lost his balance, fell into the water and disappeared. James Long, a discharged soldier employed at the clubhouse, dived and found the boy caught between two piles. The boy was unconscious but was soon restored.

EXPECT THE BRITISH TO KEEP TRADE CURB

American Chamber in London Looks for Continuance of Import Limitation.

MODIFICATION HOPED FOR

Concessions Obtained for More Shipments of Motor Vehicles and Shoes.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The American Chamber of Commerce Review for July says that British import restrictions are likely to be continued after Sept. 1, when, the Government promised, they would be reviewed.

The Government's trade policy is expected to be announced before Parliament meets on Aug. 15. Premier Lloyd George says that the policy cannot be made legislative until Parliament reconvenes late in October, and he considers that the present import restrictions should be continued until that time.

Sir Auckland Geddes, Acting President of the Board of Trade, on the other hand, says he is not prepared to state what import policy will be in effect after Sept. 1, but if restrictions are still in existence the permissible rate of importation will be at least as high as at present.

The American Chamber anticipates that restrictions affecting many lines of American goods will be modified. It has secured concessions for the import of 5,000 additional motor vehicles from America. There are no restrictions on light commercial trucks up to one and a half tons carrying capacity, but motor cycles, tractors, and accessories are still restricted.

The Chamber has also just obtained a concession for an additional 10 per cent of the 1919 imports of shoes from America until the end of October, according to the review.

The drop in sterling exchange, it is asserted, is causing British importers to hold back American orders and, wherever possible, to buy in countries where the value of the pound is higher than in the United States. The export trade to Europe must suffer, it is urged, unless financial assistance in the form of American purchases of foreign goods and securities enables European countries to pick up their exchange.

Meanwhile the Government, in consultation with banking and trade interests, is preparing to re-establish British export trade by providing sterling credits for the countries not in a position to pay at present by exports for essential imports, says the review.

The official shipping report shows that there are 2,500,000 tons of shipping under construction, practically every yard being packed with orders, with favorable labor conditions. The new tonnage should take the water within twelve months, but this prospect is unlikely. Virtually all the new construction is cargo tonnage, and the absence of passenger tonnage is regretted in view of the efforts of the United States in this direction and the plans of the United States Shipping Board for 1,000-foot liners.

The Government has subscribed for 1,700,000 shares of the 3,000,000 and appointed two Directors of the British Dyestuffs Corporation, formed by arrangement with the Board of Trade to promote the manufacture of synthetic dyestuffs and colors.

Except under license, the Government has already prohibited the importation of all necessary coal-tar derivatives for ten years. The Chamber understands that where imports are permitted the preference will be given to the United States.

The compulsory scheme of standard clothing will be revived, the review says, to check high prices following the removal of the wool control. Food control will be continued throughout the Winter, the Government to supervise the purchasing, distribution, and prices. More plentiful supplies than last Winter are expected, but prices will be just as high.

The unfavorable exchange and the lack of outbound coal cargoes, it is said, are the features mainly responsible for keeping up the prices. Great Britain cannot turn to Australia and New Zealand, where supplies are anundant, because of the shipping shortage. Three cargoes can arrive from America to one from the Antipodes.

FOR COURT-MARTIAL APPEAL

Senate Witness Urges Review by a Nonmilitary Body.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Reforms in the present military court-martial system were urged today before the Senate Military Sub-Committee by J. E. Runcie of New York, a former instructor at the West Point Military Academy. The committee is holding hearings on the bill of Senator Chamberlain of Oregon revising the present system of military justice. Samuel T. Ansell, who resigned from the army recently after making a long fight against the present court-martial system, will testify on Monday.

Mr. Runcie declared the existing articles of war relating to courts-martial were obsolete, unjust, absurd and undemocratic, and provide for no authoritative interpretation of the court-martial code. He also said too arbitrary power was conferred upon the military officers and that there could be no appeal from court-martial proceedings.

He recommended modifying existing regulations so as to require trials to be conducted by men familiar with law and permit appeals to a body not under military control.

The witness said many injustices were now done under the present system, adding that because of the class distinction in the army it was impossible for an officer to deal justly with an enlisted man. He also referred to what military authorities term their devil's article, in the articles of war, by which a commanding officer can declare almost any offense a military offense, and said many men had been convicted and sentenced on charges involving no violation of military regulations.

The existing court-martial system, the witness said, was copied from that of England in 1774 and was based not on law, but upon the authority of the Crown. Since that time, England, he said, had revised its code, but this country had not, except in minor particulars.

WILL WED REV. J. H. S. FAIR.

The wedding of Miss Rosalie Bard Moran, daughter of Charles Adams Moran and the late Mrs. Moran, and the Rev. James H. S. Fair, son of the late Very Rev. Campbell Fair, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Omaha, Neb., will take place on Tuesday in St. Bernard's Church, Bernardsville, N. J.

Miss Moran was a member of Miss Anne Morgan's unit for refuge work in France, driving an ambulance for the French Army at the Chateau-Thierry front for several months during the drive at that point. The Rev. Fair is vicar of St. John's Chapel at Bernardsville and headmaster of St. Bernard's School for Boys at Gladstone, N. J.

Advance Fall Fashions

Adding to the fascination of new styles—as interesting as the premiere of an opera—this Winter new and beautiful materials make their initial appearance.

The fabrics of the Autumn and Winter of 1920 are artistic—the wonder work of slow weaving and intricate looms—they are distinctive and cannot be commercial, for as with all things artistic, but little can be created in a day.

The lines compete with the beauty of the fabrics. Peachbloom; duvetyn; frost-glo; fortuna; bokhara—are among the new offerings. Each day increases the charm and diversity of this early Autumn showing at Best & Co.

ANOTHER PROTEST SENT TO CARRANZA

State Department Tries to Save Irrigation Rights for Landowners in Sonora.

SENATE ASKS INFORMATION

On What Has Been Done for American Interests Threatened by the Agrarian Law.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2. — Protest against the cancellation of the concession held by the Richardson Construction Company, an American concern, for the use of the water from the Yaqui River for the irrigation of land it owns in Sonora, Mexico, has been made to President Carranza by the State Department. Previously the department had protested against the attempted confiscation of the company's land under the new Sonora agrarian law.

It was learned today that the department had informed the Mexican Government that the company had purchased its lands under the Mexican law; had obtained the right to use the water from the Yaqui River under a license granted by the Mexican Government and had fulfilled every obligation with that Government.

The revolutionary disturbances in Sonora, it was said, made it impossible for the company to continue the work on the immense irrigation system which is partly in operation, and the Mexican Government, by official action, announced that the requirements of the contract of the company would be suspended until the country was pacified. Upon this official announcement the company suspended operations, and Pastor Rouaix, Secretary of Fomento in the Carranza Cabinet, later declared the concession nullified.

A resolution by Senator Smith of Arizona, adopted unanimously by the Senate today, asks the State Department to inform the Senate what protests have been made by the United States to Mexican authorities to prevent the confiscation of American owned land in Mexico under the provisions of the agrarian law enacted in the State of Sonora.

The National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico issued a statement today and sent a copy of it to the State Department, protesting against statements made by President Carranza of Mexico, in an interview to The Associated Press. The protest follows:

"The statement is the old protestation of the Carranza government that confiscation is not intended by the Constitution, decrees and proposed laws of Mexico, against which the foreign offices of the United States, Great Britain, France, and Holland have protested as confiscatory. It is merely a denial that tricky legislation depriving legal owners of oil lands, honestly acquired and made valuable, constitutes confiscation. The attitude of the American Government in this matter is sufficient refutation of the statements attributed to President Carranza.

"As to his statement that 'the petroleum companies have set out to engender ill feeling—they are doing this through the medium of some sections of the American press, which are distorting facts to suit their own ends,' the association hereby asks Manuel Carpio, the official propagandist of the Carranza government in the United States, who is thoroughly aware of all statements made, to point out any misstatement in connection with the oil controversy published in the American press which has fallen under President Carranza's charge of 'unreliability.'"

SENATORS DEFEND J. D. RYAN

Call Attack on Former Aircraft Head Outrageous and Scurrilous.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2. — Senator Thomas, Democrat, Colorado, told the Senate today that statements made before a House war investigating committee yesterday regarding John D. Ryan, former director of aircraft production, were "outrageous." The Senator said Mr. Ryan's record of service with the Government during the war was "as clean as a hound's tooth."

Senator Myers, Democrat, Montana, declared the statements were "scurrilous attacks" without foundation, and Senator Phelan, Democrat, California, also deplored them.

Charges were made before the House Committee that approximately $12,000,000 was spent by the spruce production division of the aircraft board to build a railroad in Wisconsin ostensibly for logging purposes in obtaining spruce for airplanes, but really to complete an important link of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad of which Mr. Ryan is a director.

NO NATIONAL GUARD.

Connecticut Will Maintain State Defense Organization Only.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Governor Holcomb of Connecticut, in a letter received today by Colonel W. F. Martin, officer in charge of National Guard matters at the Northeastern Department, said that Connecticut does not need National Guard organizations, and does not wish to share in the formation of a National Guard division.

Its State Guard, armed, equipped, and maintained at State expense, was ample to safeguard State interests, he wrote. The battalion of infantry, two troops of cavalry, a battalion of field artillery, an ambulance company, and six companies of coast artillery, which Connecticut was to organize under the National Defense act, may be allotted to other New England States, it was said.

WILSON SAVED OBJECTOR.

Commuted Death Sentence to Six Years in Prison.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Private Lester G. Ott, assigned to a battalion of conscientious objectors at Fort Riley, Kansas, was sentenced to death last October for having refused to obey an order to clean up the camp, but the sentence was commuted by President Wilson to dishonorable discharge and six years' imprisonment. Records in the case were made public today.

Major Gen. Leonard Wood, who was commanding at Camp Funston at the time, recommended that the sentence be commuted to twenty-five years' imprisonment because the emergency requiring execution of the extreme penalty had passed.

PASS FIRST TARIFF BILL.

House Would Levy High Duty on Chemical Glassware.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The House today passed the first protective tariff measure to be acted upon since the Republicans regained control of Congress. The measure levies high duties on chemical glassware and apparatus.

It now goes to the Senate.

Duties of 60 per cent. ad valorem are levied by the bill on laboratory glass and porcelain wares and on surgical and dental instruments, and 45 per cent. ad valorem on optical glass, and philosophical, scientific and laboratory apparatus. The measure also repeals the duty-free provisions for imports of these articles for use by Government bureaus and educational institutions.

Debate on the measure, which was framed by Representative Bacharach, Republican, New Jersey, opened the fight of the conflicting views of the tariff held by Republicans and Democrats. Representative Kitchin of North Carolina, ranking Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee, which recommended passage of the bill, chided the Republican members of "monopolizing favoritism" by reporting several measures of particular interest and benefit in their own localities.

Republicans replied that separate measures were reported to aid industries that sprang up during the war.

"SCIENCE" SUIT EVIDENCE IN

Arguments and Illegal Ouster Charge to be Heard in Fall.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Evidence in the suit of the Trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society to restrain the Board of Directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, from interfering in their conduct of the society's affairs, was closed today. The hearing, which has been held before a Master, has been in progress for twenty-seven court days. Arguments will be made on Sept. 8.

An opinion given the Directors on Sept. 6, 1916, by General Frank S. Streeter to the effect that it would be illegal for them to increase their salaries from $2,500 to $10,000, which was introduced by counsel for John V. Dittemore, a former Director, was the principal feature of the evidence today. It was shown by records also that Dittemore and Archibald McLellan had opposed increasing the salaries.

The action of Dittemore against the Directors, in which he claims he was removed illegally as a member of the board, will be heard on Oct. 6.

NC-4 MAY FLY TO COAST.

Seaplane, in Charge of Read, to be Sent Across Continent.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Senator Phelan of California announced today after a conference with Secretary Daniels that the naval seaplane NC-4, the first aircraft to cross the Atlantic Ocean, might attempt a flight to the Pacific Coast, "in order that the people of the Pacific Coast might have an opportunity of seeing it."

"Plans are now under consideration," said Senator Phelan, "to have the NC-4 make a flight across the continent, stopping at many of the large centres. It should do much good in the matter of enlistments."

PORTLAND, Me., Aug. 2.—The NC-4 early in September will start from here for a cruise to Galveston, Texas, according to an announcement today at the Navy Recruiting Station. The seaplane will be accompanied by the Isabel, a converted yacht, and will be anchored for exhibition at the principal coast cities. She will be under command of Lieut. Commander A. C. Read, who directed her flight across the Atlantic.

ARMY REDUCED TO 612,708.

Only the First and Third Divisions Now Remain in Europe.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The War Department announced today that 3,113,120 officers and enlisted men had been discharged from the army since Nov. 11, 1918, thus bringing the estimated strength of the armies of the United States as of July 29 to 612,503, not however, including 6,090 marines attached to the American Expeditionary Forces.

Of the 612,708 men 136,270 were in Europe on July 29, while 67,650 were on the sea en route from Europe and 351,357 were in the United States. The others were at various stations.

The announcement is made that only the First and Third Divisions now remain in Europe, the Third Division will leave the occupied area for Brest about Aug. 5; and the First will leave about Aug. 15.

The present strength of the armies is 17 per cent. of the strength on Nov. 11, the reduction thus being 83 per cent. A total of 1,798,275 troops sailed from Europe since Nov. 11, 1918. A total of 220,000 sailed from Europe in July.

Enlistments reported to date total 01,650, and included in this number are the following: For A. E. F. in Europe, 12,754; A. E. F. in Siberia, 2,069; Philippine Department, 2,876; Panama Canal, 279; Hawaii, 1,972; Alaska, 169.

The following was the status of the armies as of July 29: Europe, 136,270; Siberia, 8,477; at sea, en route Europe, 944; at sea, en route United States, 66,736; United States, 351,357; United States possessions, 28,924; total, 612,708.

WILL KEEP UP FIGHT TO PROTECT PARKS

Association Plans Appeal to Higher Courts Against Use of Arsenal Building.

INFRINGES PEOPLE'S RIGHTS

Open Spaces Designed for the Poor Man, Says Playgrounds Leader.

The Parks and Playgrounds Association announced yesterday that although defeated in its first effort to prevent the invasion of Central Park by the Safety Institute of America, it would continue its fight through the higher courts. The Supreme Court has just denied the application for an injunction to restrain the Safety Institute from occupying the Arsenal Building in the Park. David Brady said the Directors of the association felt it a duty to get the opinions of the higher courts as to the decision, as they believe the parks are of the greatest importance to those who rely upon them for enjoyment and recreation.

"We still feel the park was designed solely for the amusement and enjoyment of the people," he continued, "and that the ... which were simply educational, no matter how praiseworthy their object, had no place therein. We think the reason so many attempts are made to invade the park is that the promoters lose sight of its purpose. The wealthy ran go to the country and come in close communication with nature. Central Park and other like places are the 'poor man's country,' and should contain nothing that reminds him of the painful or unfortunate sides of life. There should be nothing suggested to him therein but the beauties of nature and of Him who created them.

"Aside from asserting the legal rights of the people of the city as to conversion of park space, the association is doing other work. It recently has opened its new playground centre at Spring and Varick Streets, where more than 200 children are entertained daily. Old inhabitants in this district say this play plot is an oasis in a desert. It is the only open-air play centre in the district. For years there has been a demand for organized play in this neighborhood, but the needs of the children have not been heeded.

"The Parks and Playgrounds Association, in co-operation with the Spring Street Neighborhood House, obtained the use of the only available corner plot in the district and installed equipment for organized play. The children of the neighborhood have been quick to express their appreciation.

George Gordon Battle, President of the association, expressed strong feeling as to the necessity of conserving and developing the man power of the nation, and providing proper environment for this development.

"The experience of the draft boards which declared so many of our young men unfit to serve their country," he said, "has shown us the danger of the lack of youthful development. The physical debility of a large number of our young men was traceable to a lack of exercise and youthful recreation. Viewed from this angle, the needs of parks and playgrounds in this city are great. Viewed in the light of the development of a better type of citizenship, the need of outdoor life and play is equally great.

"The war has taught the American people the lesson of cheerful giving. Certainly, after subscribing to Liberty bonds, and all war activities beyond its quota, New York will not deny the childhood of its children. To do our best work, we must have co-operative help. The people of the city know this, and I believe they will not deny their support."

Contributions for the Parks and Playgrounds Association should be mailed to James A. Renwick, the Treasurer, at 1,123 Broadway.

RIOTERS IN CHICAGO KNIFE MILITIA CAPTAIN

Attempt At Assassination Made in An Alley—Incendiary Fires Increase Tension.

CHICAGO, Sunday, Aug. 3.—Snipers, hiding in an alley of the eastern section of the riot zone, attempted to assassinate Captain A. R. Wehrheim of Co. C, 4th Illinois Reserve Infantry, early this morning. He was wounded in the right side by a knife thrust after several shots had been fired at him.

Fires yesterday morning destroyed six blocks of homes of Stock Yards workers, and to prevent a recurrence of these negro labor will be barred from the yards, it was announced after a conference between Governor Lowden and the packers.

It had been planned to permit the 15,000 negro workers to return Monday, but feeling was aggravated by the fire, which many of the foreign workers who were made homeless charged the negroes with starting.

Governor Lowden expressed the belief that labor troubles rather than race feeling was responsible for the fires, despite statements that witnesses had reported to the Fire Attorney that they saw negroes setting fires in the neighborhood.

Troops were on duty at night at the fire ruins and in the negro residence district. Schools and fire stations have been opened to homeless families, some of whom camped on a nearby prairie with their small heaps of belongings.

Coroner Hoffman has announced that Eugene Williams, a colored youth, who was reported stoned and knocked from a raft into Lake Michigan last Sunday at a bathing beach, the act precipitating the riots, had not been struck by stones, but had been drowned. George Stauber, white, is being held by the police on a charge of murder in connection with Williams' death.

Only a few minor disturbances occurred yesterday. In one case a Mexican, Theodore Gracia, said to have been mistaken for a negro, was stabbed, probably fatally, by a white man.

The Federal, State and city investigations of the riots and fire continues yesterday, and at least 250 negro suspects and several score of whites were taken to jail.

Negro attorneys are preparing damage suits against the city. In at least twelve cases of negroes slain attorneys have prepared suits for $5,000 each.

DENIES NEGROES ARE 'REDS.'

Colored Bishop Sees Riots as Result of Mob Fear.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 2.—Bishop Charles Henry Phillips of Nashville, Tenn., Bishop of the Fourth District, Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of several Southern States and all of the Pacific Slope, here today on businesss, issued the following statement regarding the recent race riots in Washington and Chicago:

"I cannot believe that the negro was influenced by Bolshevist agents in the part he took in the rioting. It is not like him to be a traitor or a revolutionist who would destroy the Government. But then the reign of mob law to which he has so long lived in terror and the injustices to which he has had to submit have made him sensitive and impatient.

"I strongly advise the negro to be patient, law-abiding, and to abstain from all unlawful methods, remembering that lawlessness begets lawlessness and that reforms, following the world war, will take time.

"I am unalterably opposed to violence and bloodshed, and advise my race against any propaganda that would attempt to procure our rights through these methods. We can accomplish more by moral suasion, by appealing to the press and to our white friends to help us in our struggle for our rights than by violence and bloodshed."

UNION OUSTS MAN AS "RED."

Bridgeport Official Also Charged with Arbitrarily Calling Strikes.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 2.—Samuel Lavit, for some time business agent of the Machinists' Union in this city, was today ousted from the union by E. C. Davison, International Secretary, acting for International President W. S. Johnson of the I. A. of M., on charges of calling unauthorized strikes in nineteen of the shops here, being actively connected with Bolshevik Soviet work in Brooklyn and this city, and of making promises to workers here that he could not hope to fulfill.

Bridgeport has been in the throes of labor troubles for the last three weeks, starting with a strike of corset workers and extending rapidly from them to other unions in the city. The spread of this labor trouble is attributed by members of the district lodge of the Machinists' Union, to Lavit's tactics.

KILLS 1, WOUNDS 4 IN ROW AT PICNIC

Man Meets Wife, from Whom He Had Been Separated, and Shoots at Her.

OVERPOWERED AFTER FIGHT

Fires Five Shots, One of Which Is Fatal, at Happy Husbands' Club Outing.

Arthur J. Gould, 30 years old, a carpenter, who has been for years separated from his wife, went to the picnic of the Happy Husbands' Club at the Harlem River Casino at 6 o'clock last night, quarreled with his wife, who was there with her brother, opened fire with a revolver, killed a stranger and wounded his wife and three others.

He called his wife, Mrs. Irene Gould, 31 years old, of 531 East 136th Street, away from the table where she was sitting with her brother. She refused to come at first, saying that she wished to have nothing to do with him, but finally walked a few feet away from her party and started to talk with him in the midst of tables where about 600 members and guests of the Happy Husbands' Club, including many women and children, were eating. They had a few unfriendly words, and he then showed her a letter. She made a gesture with her hands as if to signify that it was of no interest to her. He whispered something to her and she exclaimed in anger. This brought many of the diners to their feet:

"I am not afraid of you or your revolver."

Gould whipped out the weapon and fired at her, the bullet striking her wrist as she threw it up to protect her face. Richard Fisher, 24 years old, a watchman at Harlem Market, who was sitting at a nearby table, but was unacquainted with Gould or his wife, ran forward to interfere, and fell with a bullet in the forehead, which caused his death almost instantly.

Gould kept on firing at his wife, and the shots, which went wild, wounded three others. These are: William Lohme, 27 years old, of 251 West Thirty-fifth Street, in the right thigh; James Smith, 30 years old, of 238 East Thirty-fifth Street, in the right leg, and Emma Smith, 14 years old, of 320 East 126th Street, in the right ankle.

His revolver empty, Gould was seized by picnickers, forced against a wall, and was being beaten with chairs when Policemen Kelly and Meaney, who had heard the shots, rushed in and found the picnic ground in a panic, with women fainting, children screaming, and a mob shouting and manhandling Gould. They forced their way through the crowd and rescued the man, who was locked up on a charge of homicide. Gould refused to tell the police his motive for the shooting or to give his address or any other information.

RECRUITING NAVY AIR FORCE.

Rockaway Station Personnel to be Brought at Once to 300.

In connection with the plan to carry on the Rockaway Air Station, the navy has announced a recruiting campaign to enlist new personnel for this station, which is to be manned at once to its full complement of 300. An announcement from the navy recruiting station at 34 East Twenty-third Street says:

"New men will be enrolled for two years to continue this interesting work. Lieutenant Myron F. Eddy, a flight officer from Rockaway, has been detailed as aviation aide to Lieutenant Commander Wickersham to enlist these men. This is the first time in the history of naval aviation that enrollment for aviation duty only has been authorized. The advantages to those interested are excellent.

"Machinists, carpenters, and other mechanics competent to enlist for work on seaplanes will receive from $55.50 to $83 a month and subsistence. Their pay is increased 50 per cent. when they become members of seaplane flight crews.

"Young men who want to become aviation mechanics enlist for three years and spend the first year in an aviation school at Great Lakes, drawing a salary of $32.60 and subsistence. If an ex-soldier enlists for this schooling he receives $35.00 monthly, and a thirty-day furlough with pay at once. Any sailor who has been released less than four months receives a cash bonus immediately of four months' base pay.

"The only way a man can receive a commission in naval aviation now is to enlist. Many enlisted men are taught to fly. Any one enlisting may be sent to the air station he chooses, or it is possible for him to receive a sea-going detail on an aviation ship on either the east or west coast."

VENIZELOS URGING CASE.

American Delegation Still Favors Aegean Outlet for Bulgaria.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Premier Venizelos of Greece held conferences today with the American and other delegations to the Peace Conference regarding the Bulgarian boundaries. Thus far the Americans have not changed their view that Bulgaria ought to have an outlet to the Aegean Sea.

The Supreme Council Friday discussed the report of the Interallied Military Council, advising that the Klagenfurt district of Carinthia had been evacuated in conformity with the decision of the Peace Conference. The council also decided certain questions regarding the Jugoslav and Hungarian frontiers.

The treaty of peace with Austria, as outlined in advices given out at Washington on June 2, provides that disposition of the Klagenfurt basin shall be determined by a plebiscite to be held within six months from the time the treaty goes into effect, the Austrian authorities to be withdrawn.

GERMAN NOW SAYS CHARGES WERE LIES

Correspondent Tells How Story of French and British Dumdums Was Fabricated.

BUT KAISER SENT PROTEST

Other Stories, Says Binder, Were Equally False and Were Known by German Headquarters to be So.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

BERLIN, July 29.—Although the post-peason series of "exposés" by Ersberger, Wedal, Csernin, and other international figures still is running full tilt, there were some new disclosures yesterday that may be of more interest to many people than the arguments over which German party or statesmen prolonged the war.

The war debate may not be settled until brought before a special court, but the testimony of a new witness in his own field is convincing beyond doubt. It brands as absolutely false in an almost laughable way the stories of "Schrecklichkeit" told by Germany about its opponents early in the war.

Charges that the French were first to use bombing machines against peaceful communities are pronounced absolutely without foundation, allegations that French doctors poisoned wells and springs are declared made out of whole cloth, and the supposed proof that the French and British used dumdum bullets, the witness swears, never would have been considered except for the gross ignorance of the officers making the accusation.

This new critic of Germany's war policies is known throughout Germany as H. B. H. Binder, the signature under which, from the first days of the war, he wrote newspaper articles as an official war correspondent attached to Great Headquarters. Binder says he feels he ought to tell now what in that capacity he was prohibited from revealing. The man he charges with responsibility for the falsehoods he enumerates is Major Nikolai Mehr, former head of the intelligence section of Great Headquarters.

After the fall of Longwy on Aug. 26, 1914, he relates, the Germans found a large quantity of concave-nosed cartridges and several lathes for drilling out the tips of projectiles. Immediately a formal protest was sent out to the world protesting against this use of dumdums as a violation of the Convention of Geneva. Even the Kaiser himself got excited and sent his famous protest telegram to President Wilson.

But captured French officers laughed. Because of the limited area for rifle practice at Longwy, they said it was dangerous to use the regular form of ammunition and therefore holes were drilled in the noses of the bullets used for this purpose to reduce distance of travel. Military attachés of neutral States then at Great Headquarters said their countries did the same, and tests showed the extreme range of these cartridges was 400 meters, but Major Nikolai Mehr, having published the dumdum charges to the world, would not give way.

In search of further evidence, he ordered all field hospitals to report all wounds caused by dumdums; but when the reports charged only about two out of 10,000 wounds up to this cause, he had to look further for proof.

"And one day he thought he had it," Binder said. "He brought a stack of English rifles to the headquarters of the correspondents and military attachés whom he had called into conference. He said he had proof that removed all doubt, and pointed triumphantly to the English weapon. 'There you see clearly,' were his words, 'the English use dumdums. Here on this rifle is a clipping device for making dumdums.'

"Immediately, the American, Argentine, and Spanish military attachés, and the German correspondents, who also are experts on arms, opposed the statement. They expressed surprise that he didn't recognize the device as a telescope sight.

"This response naturally irritated Nikolai, but it did not change his views. As a result, an announcement went to the world from the German General Staff that the British used dumdums and that there were clipping devices on their rifles for preparing them."

Concerning the General Staff charge of Aug. 3, 1914, that French planes flew across Belgium, violating its neutrality, and bombed railroads in Baden and Bavaria, Binder says:

"This announcement, which lacked any foundation in fact, was given out solely to arouse public spirit."

A similar announcement that a railway near Nuremberg was bombed a day earlier, Binder says, was fabricated for stage effect, but had little result because of the places selected. He speaks of the well-poisoning story as "recalling the horror of the fairy tales of the Middle Ages."

GUARD HEALTH OF CATTLE.

Mississippi County to Vote on Eradication of Tuberculosis.

What is said to be the first election in the United States to decide whether or not a county should eradicate tuberculosis from its herds of cattle has been ordered to be held in Clay County, Miss., on Sept. 2, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The department points out that the results of this election will have much more than local interest, because the election may be the forerunner of hundreds of thousands of others in other sections of the country. The election was ordered by the County Board of Supervisors after a petition asking for it had been presented by a group of citizens.

The Department reports that Virginia has a larger percentage of dairy animals which have been tested with tuberculin and found free from tuberculosis than any other State. The Old Dominion has "79 accredited herds" on the list of the United States Department of Agriculture.

In the twelve months preceding March 1, 1919, a total of 22,571 cattle were tested in Virginia under the co-operative plan, and 772 reacted to the test, a percentage of only 3.4. This is a slight decrease, according to the Department, from the number of reactors located during the preceding year, during which 4.6 per cent. of the cattle tested were found to be diseased.

It's a Pity

BOTH Oriental Pearls and Técla Pearls are so ineffably beautiful that it seems a pity to drag in the sordid consideration of price.

And yet it is only fair to state that Oriental Pearls are prohibitive, whereas Técla Pearls are not.

PARIS HONORS WAR DEAD.

Ceremony of National Gratitude Attended by Statesmen and Diplomats

PARIS, Aug. 2.—A ceremony of national gratitude to the soldiers of the great war was held today at the Sorbonne. President Poincaré, Cabinet members, Cardinal Amette, Archbishop of Paris, the British Foreign Minister, Arthur J. Balfour; the Italian Foreign Minister, Signor Tittoni; Frank L. Polk, American Assistant Secretary of State; the diplomatic corps, peace delegates, and many others attended.

Many of the speakers spoke directly to more than a thousand children from the Paris schools, expressing the belief that they would not forget the lessons of the war. These children, Paul Deschanel, President of the Chamber of Deputies, said, would not fail in their great task. Marshal Foch, whose speech was read, asked the school children to prove themselves worthy of their elders and continue the wonderful peace work which was founded on heroism.

Premier Clemenceau sent a message addressed particularly to the school children, in which he said: "France is calling us in peace as she did in war."

"The dead alone have the right to rest," President Poincaré said, "but we must continue their work and realize their wishes. Yesterday France found soldiers. Today she must find citizens."

Poems glorifying the memory of the dead soldiers—of whom the audience was reminded forcibly by the presence of a delegation of the mutilated—were written for the occasion by Jean Richepin and Jean Aicard.

LEGION CONVENTION DATE.

County and State Meetings to Precede National Session Nov. 10.

The American Legion will hold its national convention at Minneapolis on Nov. 10-12, according to a statement made recently at the New York State headquarters. This convention will be preceded by county and State meetings, at which delegates will be selected. The county meetings will be held from Sept. 22 to 29, and the New York State convention will take place at Rochester on Oct. 10 and 11.

The method of representation to be adopted, according to present plans, is as follows:

Each post will be entitled to one delegate to the county convention, and in addition one delegate for each 100 members over the original 15 required to obtain a charter. The county convention will then select four delegates to the State meeting, as well as one representative for each 1,000 paying members in the county. The State, in turn, will send to the national convention four delegates at large and one additional delegate for every 1,000 paying members in the State.

The number of posts so far chartered in the State of New York is 186, with a total of about 20,000 members. Of these 186 posts 72 are located in Greater New York, Manhattan having 28, Brooklyn 23, the Bronx 10, Staten Island 6, and Queens County outside of Brooklyn 5.

SUICIDE CHARGE DISMISSED.

Woman in Hospital Had Been Under Police Guard Nearly Two Years.

A charge of attempted suicide, which had been pending for nearly two years against Miss Phoebe Williams, 39 years old, of 188 Tenth Street, Brooklyn, was dismissed by Magistrate James T. O'Neill after an examination held in the Holy Family Hospital yesterday.

It was alleged that on Sept. 25, 1917, Miss Williams jumped from the window of her apartment on the third floor. She was taken to the hospital as prisoner, charged with attempted suicide, suffering from fractures of both arms, hips, and legs. Since that time she has been confined to her bed.

At the request of Inspector Bernard J. Hayes, Magistrate O'Neill, accompanied by John Cummings, stenographer, and John Kearns, Clerk of the Fifth Avenue Court, went to the hospital and heard the case.

In discharging Miss Williams Magistrate O'Neill said: "Miss Williams, you have my sympathy and I hope you recover completely and will be able to leave the hospital soon."

Inspector Hayes told Magistrate O'Neill that three policemen, each on duty eight hours, had been occupied watching the prisoner ever since the accident.

FEARS FOREIGN NEWSPRINT CONTROL

Department of Agriculture Advises the Conservation of Domestic Forests.

BIG SUPPLY IN NORTHWEST

Practice of Forestry and Adequate Survey by the Government Recommended.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Two-thirds of the newsprint paper used by American newspapers is imported or is manufactured from wood or pulp imported from Canada, according to a statement issued by the Department of Agriculture. One-third is made in the United States from wood grown in the United States. The former proportion is steadily increasing, the latter is steadily decreasing. The statement continues:

"Nearly all of the American newsprint manufacturing industry is located in the Northeastern States—half of it in New York. Forests of wood suitable for pulp-making are being exhausted in the Northeastern States. At the present rate of depletion none to speak of will be left at the end of ten or twenty years. But in the Pacific Northwest—Washington, Oregon, and part of California—and the Inland Empire of Northwestern Montana and Northern Idaho are great forests that have been no more than touched by the few pulp mills in that section of the country. And in Alaska are enormous areas of forests—the annual growth of which would supply pulp enough for half of the newsprint paper used in the United States. No pulp mills are there.

"Few pulp mills have been established in the orthwest, and none have been established in Alaska, in part because of the disadvantage in freight rates in reaching the eastern markets. The Panama Canal is believed to have removed much of the reason for this disadvantage, but other obstacles—such as the disinclination of business to pioneer in new fields—remain. Development of newsprint production in these regions is also retarded, it is believed, by the lack of authoritative knowledge of the extent and character of the available supplies of forest material, their location and accessibility, available water power, and the general situation which confronts the industry.

"The practice of forestry, which is now the only possible means of a permanent supply of domestic pulpwood in the East, it is believed, would be greatly stimulated by such a survey, which would develop in detail the seriousness of the situation.

"Theasum of existing conditions is that American newspapers are becoming more and more dependent upon foreign sources for the raw material from which newsprint paper is made; the raw material is being exhausted in the section where the domestic industry is concentrated, and mills are moving from this country to Canada; while at the same time the United States contains forest resources in the Northwest and in Alaska that promise abundant supply for many years, and indefinitely under proper conservation, if the industry can be built up in these regions.

"A condition of dependence upon foreign supplies of newsprint carries with it serious possibilities not only for consumers of newsprint (chiefly our newspapers,) but also for other business interests and the public generally. It would afford a dangerous opening for covert interference with the freedom of the press and with untrammeled development of business through advertising. That such a danger is not imaginary has been evidenced abroad.

"A permanent domestic newsprint industry is therefore a matter of public importance. Its maintenance is believed to be entirely practicable if the proper public action is taken.

"The Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture, to prevent American newspapers from becoming totally dependent upon a foreign supply, recommends:

"Immediately, an adequate governmental survey of American resources in this field.

"Immediately, steps to bring about the practice of forestry and the conservation of forests in the pulp-producing regions, to the end that the annual inroads upon the forests will be lessened, and eventually will be no more than equal to the annual growth. This part of the program would require Federal and State legislation.

"As soon as practicable, development of the pulp-making industry in the northwest and in Alaska."

POTASH TRUST BUSY.

Seeking to Have Embargo Lifted by This Country, It Is Said.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Reports have been made to the State Department of alleged efforts by the German potash trust to resume control of the potash and fertiliser industries of the United States and an investigation is being made.

German agents, it is asserted, are trying to force the raising of the embargo on potash, so they may begin shipments to this country, although the present stock in Germany is said to be small. They are said to be supported by a fertiliser combination here, which hopes to obtain potash at a lower price in Germany than in the United States.

The American potash industry, according to information at the State Department, has sufficient stock to supply half the needs of the American farmers.

SELL 20 WOODEN SHIPS FOR $6,000,000 ABROAD

Fleet Board Says Undisclosed Buyer Also Has Option on 100 Additional Craft.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Authority has been given for the sale in London of twenty wooden steamers of the Shipping Board fleet at a price of $300,000 each.

In announcing the sale today, the board said the purchaser, whose name was not disclosed, had obtained an option for 100 additional craft of this type.

The ships sold are of 3,500 deadweight tons, and bring the total of the wooden steamers sold by the Government to fifty-eight. The others sold were of 4,500 tons and brought $450,000 each.

The board's announcement said the sale of the wooden steamers "offers the only opportunity in the world market today for the purchase of seagoing tonnage at an attractive price," adding that the rate of $90 per ton was "good value at bottom rates for immediate delivery."

The board is now operating 174 wooden steamers in varied service, some of them plying to all parts of the world.

GEO. A. KESSLER DECORATED

King Albert Grateful for American Aid to Belgian Blind Soldiers.

King Albert of Belgium has bestowed upon George A. Kessler, founder of the Permanent Blind Relief War Fund for Soldiers and Sailors of the Allies, and Chairman of the Fund's Executive Committee, the dignity of Officer in the Order of Leopold II., a token of appreciation of the work done by Mr. Kessler in the cause of the Belgian blinded soldiers.

The Blind Relief Fund established two years ago at the request of the Belgian Government a home and training school for its blinded nationals at Port-Villes, near Vernon, in France, where the wounded Belgians were being concentrated. Most of the men who had lost their sight were natives of Flanders and could not speak French. They had been scattered in various hospitals and in institutions for blinded soldiers throughout France and, being unfamiliar with the language, were unhappy and despondent. A remarkable change in their morale became evident soon after the fund was able to accommodate them in the training schools it had erected and they found themselves among their own people.

King Albert was deeply touched by the help extended by the American public through the Permanent Blind Relief War Fund to his stricken army, and with the Queen has frequently expressed his gratitude.

HATTERS' UNION WINS.

Connecticut Judge Dissolves Injunction in Alleged Boycott Case.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 2.—Judge Maltbie of the Superior Court today dissolved the injunction that he issued July 5 against Jeremiah Scully, John O'Hara and Royal Raymond, officers of the United Hatters of North America, and especially against Lodges 10 and 11 of Danbury, and Lodge 16 of Norwalk, against their boycott and interference with the R. and W. Hat Shop, Inc., of Norwalk.

The injunction was asked by the R. and W. Hat Shop on the ground of coercion by the United Hatters, it being contended that George McLachlan of Danbury was prohibited from completing his contract of furnishing hat bodies to the complainants.

ROHLFS WILL TRY FOR NEW ALTITUDE

Holder of American Record, Made Last Week, Hopes to Attain 33,000 Feet.

SEEKS DATA FOR SCIENTISTS

Predicts Speed of 200 Miles an Hour with Ease in Swift Currents of the Upper Air.

Roland Rohlfs, the holder of the American altitude record, which he made last Wednesday afternoon at Roosevelt Field, when he piloted a Curtiss triplane to a height of 30,700 feet, will endeavor to make a new record for altitude tomorrow afternoon. Rohlfs said yesterday that one result of high altitude flying will mean, eventually, in his opinion a speed of 200 miles an hour, and that with specially equipped machines long distance flights will be rendered comparatively simple. In his flight tomorrow the aviator will seek to reach an altitude of 33,000 feet, six and one-quarter miles.

"I have experienced no ill effects from my Thursday's flight," said Rohlfs yesterday, "unless it be that after the flight I could not sleep, but that was to be expected on account of the terrific speed at which I was forced to descend when my gasoline and oil supply gave out. Rushing from rarified to dense atmosphere at the rate of better than 200 miles an hour produces a peculiar effect on the heart action, and that, I am told, is the reason why I was unable to get any rest. The sudden drop gave me a painful headache which lasted for some time.

"I shall take every precaution on my next trial. In order to obviate the trouble I had in keeping my motor warm, shutters will be provided, and the gasoline pump, which became airbound, making it necessary for me to pump by hand for nearly two hours, has been adjusted. I shall also make more careful selection of the gasoline I use. In my last attempt I used a high-test gas, and I failed to get within 200 revolutions per minute of what I got the first time.

"I shall also wear more clothing. On Thursday my hands got very cold, in spite of the fact that I had on several pairs of gloves and mittens. I shall also carry more oxygen, for on both my flights my supply has given out. I always try to be as sparing as possible, not using it until I reach approximately 23,000 feet.

"What is the purpose of altitude flights? I suppose that most persons think they are made merely to satisfy the vanity of the pilot or the airplane designer—something like the automobile speed race. Not at all. It has a distinct scientific value. It gives invaluable data to the meteorologist, and will be of infinite value when the time comes for the establishment of air lanes of travel for airplanes. At the present time our knowledge of conditions in the air is very scant, especially up as high as six miles. What we have is based largely on observations made from kites and from balloons, but these are stationary, and, for the most part, the information gained is applicable only to localities in which the tests are made. With the airplane, one can cruise about in the thin upper strata of the air and actually chart the conditions that can be expected to prevail there. It will enable us to make certain lanes of travel for airplanes of various types—say, the upper levels for the speedier planes and the lower levels for the slower-going machines.

"We also get valuable information concerning the kind of planes and motors that will have to be built for use at various air levels. It gives us data concerning the way motors act under certain conditions and at certain levels, how the machine manoeuvres, what sort of wing construction is necessary.

"It also gives us valuable data concerning the effects of different altitudes on different people.

"It is almost impossible for us to conceive that six miles above one of our bathing beaches, six miles above cities where people are sweltering in the heat, the temperature is 25 degrees below zero; that a wind of from 100 to 200 miles an hour is blowing.

"That information in itself will be important when commercial aviation gets to be a regular thing. With all this information at hand, think how easy it will be for us to go up in a specially constructed machine, the body built perhaps on the principle of the vacuum bottle, take advantage of the 200-mile-an-hour wind which prevails from the east, and land in Europe in half a day. Because, with a wind of that velocity, you can conserve gasoline and simply let the wind blow you where you want to. You can get the wind direction at various levels by means of observation kites.

"Speeds greater than we have ever thought of will be attained and commercial aviation will take advantage of them sooner or later. We have, in fact, already taken advantage of them, for in their flight across the Atlantic Alcock and Brown found a favorable wind at 10,000 feet and made the trip in sixteen hours. When we have machines capable of climbing to high altitudes and capable of flight in high altitudes, still greater speed will be attained, and this seems to be the age of speed."

FALL 2,000 FEET, UNHURT.

Aviators Turn Over and Over, but Dive Safely Into Oyster Bay.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Aug. 2.—Their airplane disabled 2,000 feet in the air, with sparks flying from the engine and threatening to burn up the machine, two aviators turned over and over for 1,800 feet today, righted the plane, and then took a nose dive for 200 feet into Oyster Bay. They were submerged, but escaped without a scratch.

The fliers were Lieutenant John W. Frost, adopted son of Ernest A. Elgelow of 20 East Fifty-sixth Street, Manhattan, who has a Summer home at Oyster Bay, and Sergeant Carl D. Colman. Both are members of the Army Aviation Corps at Mineola.

The aviators went up to test a Curtiss H. Shortly before noon, when they were 2,000 feet in the air, the engine fouled. Sparks shot out around them, and it was feared they would ignite the gas and oil. The engine was shut down and an attempt was made to glide to earth. Almost immediately, the machine began to turn over. It was unmanageable until within 200 feet of the water.

The men dived straight into the water and were carried under. The crews of two oyster boats rescued them and they were landed at the estate of Frederic R. Coudert. Army mechanics rescued the plane.

SETS SPEED-HEIGHT RECORD

Major Flies 137 Miles Per Hour 18,400 Feet Up.

DAYTON, Ohio, Aug. 2.—Major R. W. Schroeder, army aviator, today set a new world's speed record for high altitudes, it is claimed, when he flew at a rate of 137 miles an hour at a height of 18,400 feet. He used a two-seated Lepere biplane, designed by Captain Lepere of the French Army. It was equipped with a twelve-cylinder Liberty motor and a supercharged. Lieutenant G. W. Elfey, expert aeronautic observer, was a passenger.

According to Captain B. G. Patterson, in charge of the performance computation at McCook Field, this latest development will have a marked effect on aerial navigation, because it will enable a pilot to fly at full speed and full power above the storm zone. It will also be potent in transoceanic flights, and would make easy non-stop trips between New York and Chicago, regardless of weather conditions.

The supercharger is an attachment consisting of a gas turbine and centrifugal compressor, deriving its power from the red-hot exhaust gases of the Liberty motor. It feeds the compressed air into the carburetor at the same pressure as at sea level, so there is no lack of oxygen regardless of altitude.

It was designed by Dr. Sanford A. Moss, who worked on it for eighteen months.

Have Your Winter Furs
Remodelled Like New
Summer Rates End August 20th

Our staff of European designers and advisors have given us several radical changes from last season's silhouette.

All the new H. Jaeckel & Sons models reflect this change—showing many original adaptations not before seen in America.

You will want your Winter Furs brought up to date. Our extensive organization can do this most satisfactorily now—at special Summer rates up to August 20th.

After that date, owing to pressure of work, these prices must be increased to the regular Fall and Winter schedule. You may now see many of the new Fall effects.

to choose the right shoes for the boy or girl of 2 to 16 than to choose an adult's shoes.

Of course good stout leather is necessary—and the attention to details that marks a well-made shoe—and good appearance.

But besides all this, the lasts must be scientifically planned to protect the tender, growing bones of the young foot.

LUSTGARTEN GUILTY OF GRAND LARCENY

Jury Returns Verdict of First Degree on Indictment for $20,000 Theft.

SENTENCE ON WEDNESDAY

Head of Tax Lien Company, Before Its Failure, Was Arrested on Leaving Army.

William Lustgarten, former President of the Tax Lien Company of New York, was found guilty of grand larceny in the first degree yesterday by a jury in General Sessions before Judge Thomas C. T. Crain. Lustgarten was remanded to the Tombs until Wednesday for sentence. Lustgarten was convicted of stealing $20,000 from Robert Schalkenbach in March, 1915.

He obtained the $20,000, it was charged in the indictment, by representing to Schalkenbach that it was to be part of a pool of $50,000, which was to be used to buy east side real estate. He never bought the property, but converted the $20,000 into the checking account of the Tax Lien Company and used the money. It was charged, to meet the obligations of that company.

There are several other indictments against Lustgarten in connection with his operation of the Tax Lien Company, which failed when he disappeared in August, 1917, leaving a note in which he threatened to commit suicide. The note was found with his hat and coat on a ferryboat. In the failure of the Tax Lien Company investors lost more than $500,000. Assistant District Attorney Ferdinand N. Pecora, who prosecuted the case, declared yesterday that the total losses aggregate $800,000.

When Lustgarten left New York he went to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and enlisted in the United States Army under the name of "Allan H. Wilson." He was assigned to the Historical Division of the War Department at Washington, and later was transferred to the 309th Sanitary Train, finally being sent to France, where he was transferred to the 309th Engineers, in which he became a Corporal.

It was while he was at Savenay, France, that the authorities here, who had been following him for months, finally located him. He was arrested, and when he returned to this country with his regiment detectives followed him to Camp Mills. When he was honorably discharged from the army he was taken into custody on the indictment against him.

Mr. Schalkenbach is said to have lost $72,000 in the Tax Lien Company. Former Dock Commissioner Calvin Tomkins and former City Chamberlain Milo R. Maltbie are among others who were said also to have lost money. Lustgarten was defended by Isidor Wasservogel. The maximum penalty for his crime is ten years.

300 AUTOS STOLEN HERE EVERY MONTH

Secretary of Magistrates Courts Suggests Plan to Decrease the Losses.

TO KEEP RECORD EXCHANGE

Calls for Conference of Insurance Companies and Heads of Police Departments.

Asserting that approximately 300 automobiles are stolen every month in New York City alone, Frank Oliver, Secretary of the Magistrates Courts, yesterday sent a letter to the casualty and guarantee insurance companies, as well as to the heads of police departments, and the Secretary of State, and to the motor vehicle organizations of adjoining States, inviting them to a conference to discuss measures to decrease their losses.

The stolen automobile trade has grown to such proportions, and the shipping of stolen automobiles to other States is so easily accomplished, that only the most energetic measures of the insurance companies, working with the public officials, will put a stop to it, Mr. Oliver declares. He said that insurance companies frequently insure stolen automobiles under the name of the new purchaser. He said in his letter:

"I suggest it would be a wise thing for the insurance companies to establish a mutual exchange under neutral auspices to accomplish the following results: First, the registration of all automobiles which have been insured, giving engine number, type of car, and complete identification. Second, to be the focus point of the reports of all thefts of automobiles. Third, that all insurance companies to which application is made for insurance apply first to this bureau to find the previous record of the insurance of the car. Fourth, that such bureau subscribe to the departments of the various State governments for a complete list of all automobile license numbers, owners, &c., so that it can aid in the tracing of stolen cars.

"I suggest that the insurance companies hold a conference for the purpose of taking up with the public officials representing the licensing authorities of the various States and the police departments of the large cities, to secure a complete record of the identification of each car licensed, cross indexed so as to be easily available in all public departments dealing with the licensing of automobiles and the search for stolen cars.

"I think it would be wise for the insurance companies to urge every owner to have his car marked with a well-stamped initial or diagram, and have this filed with his application for a license. Stolen cars, under the present system of numbering, cannot be identified, because of the clever manner in which thieves erase numbers or change them. For instance, they change 3's to 8's and 1's to 7's by the mere use of a stamp similar to those used by the manufacturers.

"A central bureau, such as I have suggested, under neutral auspices, giving information only under prescribed conditions to those entitled to it, would, it seems to me, be of the utmost advantage to public departments and a source of great protection to insurance companies."

REVEALS ANCIENT ARMOR.

Spanish Connoisseur Identifies Antiquities at Art Museum.

The existence of unsuspected treasure within the walls of the Metropolitan Museum was revealed to the museum authorities by the recent visit of a Spanish connoisseur, Don José Florid, Director of the Madrid Armory, which contains the best collection of armor in the world.

Don Florid came to this country at the request of the Hispana Society, according to Dr. Dean, Acting Director of the museum, and asked him to go over the collection of armor at the Metropolitan Museum to verify the attributions made by the experts there. He inspected each piece carefully, and as a result he was able to identify positively antiquities dating from the reign of the early Spanish Kings. Among the treasures he discovered were a pair of gauntlets used by Philip II., who was King of Spain from 1556 to 1598; an inlaid pistol and gauntlets belonging to Charles V. (1516-56,) and three gauntlets of Philip III., who reigned from 1598 to 1621.

The museum authorities consider themselves very fortunate in having had Don Florid here, for he has given them information which few experts in the world could have furnished. The complete collection of armor has not yet been put on exhibition at the museum, but this will be done in a few months. The card catalogue of the collection will then contain notes given by the Spanish connoisseur.

SEEK TWO IN SMITH AND SHAW MURDERS

General Alarm Is Sent Out for Michael Costello and "Lefty" Curry.

COSTELLO'S BROTHERS HELD

Assistant District Attorney Says Shaw Was Lured to His Death In Hoboken.

The police of New York and New Jersey have started a systematized search for Michael Costello and "Lefty" Curry, who are wanted to throw light upon the murders of "Tanner" Smith at the Marginal Club in Eighth Avenue last Saturday night and "Rubber" Shaw in Hoboken, Thursday night, as a result of a gang feud. A general alarm for the two men has been sent out. It was admitted yesterday by Assistant District Attorney John F. Joyce. Two brothers of Costello are now being held as material witnesses in connection with the Shaw murder by Recorder Carsten of Hoboken.

Costello is wanted in connection with the murder of Shaw, as Mr. Joyce believes he has evidence tending to show that Costello lured Shaw to his death and that he gave the signal to the gunmen to begin shooting by raising his hat. The Assistant District Attorney also declared that Costello, who is in the chicken business, was a close friend of "Tanner" Smith and had expressed deep regret at the manner in which he met his death.

In describing the killing of Shaw, Mr. Joyce declared that Costello called at Shaw's house at 333 Hudson Street, Hoboken, on Thursday night, after visiting there in the afternoon. Witnesses have stated that Costello left the house with Shaw and George Lewis, who also was shot, and walked through Second Street. Costello is said to have walked slightly in advance of his two companions, and as he reached Court Alley raised his hat. Immediately there was a volley of revolver shots and Shaw and Lewis fell to the street. "Lefty" Curry, Assistant District Attorney Joyce said, is being sought in connection with the killing of Smith. He was seen to leave the Marginal Club shortly after Smith was shot, and it is said that he was shot in the leg. He is described by the police as being about 25 years of age, six feet tall, of light complexion, and has a scar behind his left ear.

The Hoboken police, in continuing the investigation of the Shaw shooting, yesterday arrested Joseph Wiggins, of 33 Third Street, Hoboken, on a technical charge of disorderly conduct. Wiggins was taken into custody early in the day by the West Hoboken police after a long chase. He is said to have been a friend of "Tanner" Smith.

Lewis, who has been removed to Christ Hospital, Jersey City, from St. Mary's Hospital, Hoboken, which is a military institution, continued yesterday to refuse to give any information regarding the shooting of Shaw or Smith to the police. Grace Madden Shaw, the young widow of Shaw, who was detained by the Hoboken police on Friday, will be turned over to the New York authorities on Monday.

THREATEN B. R. T. STRIKE.

Workers Will Try to Present Demands Tomorrow.

The demands of the unionized employes of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company for an increase of pay were not submitted to the company yesterday, as Receiver Lindley M. Garrison was out of town. The committee appointed at the meeting of the employes on Friday night will call upon Mr. Garrison tomorrow for a statement as to the company's attitude in the matter. This committee will report at a meeting of the union men in the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum on Tuesday night.

At the meeting on Friday night it was voted to demand recognition of the local division of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes of America, pay at the rate of 75 cents an hour for surface motormen and conductors, and conductors and guards of the subway and elevated lines, a proportional increase for employes in the mechanical and other departments, and an eight-hour day.

Chairman Edward Smith of the committee said yesterday that he had telegraphed Receiver Garrison that his committee would call upon him at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. If Mr. Garrison refused to treat with the committee because it did not represent 100 per cent. of the employes, Mr. Smith said, it would rest with the Executive Committee of the union whether a strike should be ordered. If a strike is declared at the meeting on Tuesday night it will probably go into effect early on Wednesday morning.

WIDOW ATTACKS WILL.

Finds She Is Not Mentioned as Heir to Rich Mexican's Estate.

Consuelo Careras de Arocena, 23 years old, widow of Raphael Arocena, a wealthy Mexican planter who died at the Hotel Plaza on June 13 last, leaving personal property worth $1,500,000 in New York State and holdings of realty in Mexico and Lower California, applied in the Surrogates Court yesterday to be appointed temporary administratrix. She stated that she did not believe her husband left a valid will, but understood that a document purporting to be his last will had been found here after his death and had been sent to Mexico City to be probated.

A copy of the alleged will has been filed here and does not mention the widow. It was executed some years ago and gives the bulk of the estate to two grandnieces living in Durango, Spain. The widow says that these grandnieces and Dr. Teodore Arocena and Enepero Arocena of Durango, who received bequests in the alleged will, are the only heirs at law besides herself.

CHILD IN 2 AUTO ACCIDENTS.

Little Girl Will Lose a Leg After Hard Trip to Hospital.

Dropping off an automobile on which she was stealing a ride, Mary Gallina, 10 years old, of 139 Manhattan Avenue, Brooklyn, ran in front of a commercial truck at Montrose Avenue near Leonard Street, owned by Hess Brothers of Manhattan, and suffered a compound fracture of the leg. John Scollon, the driver, knowing his truck could not make quick time to a hospital, called Louis Katzwa, who put the child into his automobile and started. While passing the Stagg Street Police Station a commercial auto of the Texas Company, backing down Bushwick Avenue, crashed into Katzwa's machine, smashing the car and throwing it against a pole in front of the police station. The child was taken into the station house and an ambulance summoned from St. Catharine's Hospital. At the hospital it is said the child's leg will have to be amputated.

4 HELD IN TEXAS LYNCHING.

Gilmer Grand Jury Indicts Whites for Negro's Murder.

GILMER, Texas, Aug. 2.—Four white men charged with lynching Chilton Jennings, a negro, here on July 24, were arrested today after an investigation by the Upshur County Grand Jury. The investigation disclosed that less than fifteen persons actually participated in lynching the negro, who was charged with assaulting a woman.

The men under arrest charged with murder by Grand Jury indictments are Willie Powell, Tracy Flanagan, Charley Landadale and Fritz Boyd.

U.S.NAVY

Last August we were awarded by the U. S. Government a large contract for Refrigerators for battleships, armored cruisers, submarine chasers and other vessels of the first rate. The contract called for the very highest grade of construction ever put into Refrigerators by any manufacturer. These Refrigerators were shipped to the various Navy Yards.

When the Armistice was signed, most of the Refrigerators shipped to the Philadelphia Navy Yard could not be used because the vessels for which these Refrigerators were intended would not be built by the Government.

These Refrigerators were stored in the Philadelphia Navy Yard Buildings Nos. 400 and 401, and were shipped back to us. They are now in the original crates, and are ready for immediate delivery or shipment, or can be held (on a small deposit) for Fall delivery. But the stock is almost exhausted.

These superb Refrigerators have exteriors of beautiful light sky-blue genuine fused-steel porcelain. The trim and fittings are handsome solid brass nickel-plated, with heavy solid brass nickel-plated sanitary legs equipped with brass sockets, with 6 inch clearance from the floor for easy cleaning.

These Refrigerators were made according to the rigid specifications of the Government, worked out in all details by the engineers of the U. S. Navy, and approved by the highest authorities. They have 4 doors, 5 shelves, and 2 bottom compartments. The size is 37½ inches wide, 20½ inches deep, and 60 inches high, somewhat larger than the average run of Refrigerators. Ice capacity about 100 lbs.

The Bohn Syphon Refrigerator is the standard of the world. All railroads use the Bohn Syphon System for their refrigerator cars, and every dining car in the land (the severest possible test of a Refrigerator) has a Bohn Syphon.

The actual market value of these Refrigerators is $250.00. We are offering them at $156.00.

Each Refrigerator is fitted with 2 Yale & Towne specially made nickel-plated padlocks, bearing the name "U. S. N."

The lining is genuine pure white fused-steel porcelain, single piece and with round corners. Each process in the manufacture of these Refrigerators was rigidly inspected by Government engineers and approved during the manufacture.

It is obvious that for sea service they must be absolutely proof against dampness.

We have on exhibition here probably the largest and finest display of high-class Refrigerators in the country. You will find here Bohn Refrigerators in great variety, from $19.00 up, including the Bohn All-Metal "Ideal," same as used by the U. S. Government in Panama. All are now marked at very low prices.

BOHN SYPHON REFRIGERATOR

During this Special Sale we have marked All Models at Radical Reductions

On a reasonable deposit we will hold any Refrigerator, including these U. S. Navy Refrigerators, for early Fall delivery.

1,367 RENT DISPUTES SETTLED IN WEEK

Landlords Make Concessions in All Cases Adjusted by the Mayor's Committee.

MANY GIVE YEARLY LEASES

337 Complaints Disposed Of in Brooklyn, 384 in the Bronx, and 646 in Manhattan.

As a result of hearings by the Mayor's Committee on Rent Profiteering, to adjust disputes between tenants and landlords, it was announced yesterday that Assistant Corporation Counsel Edward F. Bennett, in charge of legal matters for the committee, and Field Agent Charles A. Goldsmith had settled 1,367 cases during the week. Of these, 337 were in Brooklyn, 384 in the Bronx, and 646 in Manhattan. In all cases the landlords made concessions, and in most instances yearly leases were granted instead of month-to-month agreements.

One case of a rent increase, which entailed hardships for eighteen tenants, involved the premises at 421 to 427 Twelfth Street, Brooklyn. When the tenants entered the houses, a few years ago, they paid $12. Since then the rent has doubled. The new owner of the buildings placed them in charge of Schneider & Sons as agents, who raised the rents $6 a month, on the ground that they were making improvements. This meant that they were installing bathrooms, but in doing so they had to reduce the number of bedrooms by one.

In these houses virtually all the tenants have some member of the family in the service. Mrs. Estelle Murphy, whose husband, Corporal H. J. Murphy, was killed in action, is ill. The brother in another family died in France. Another tenant has a sick child. The agent, according to the committee, said he would make no concession, except to let the tenants remain during August, after which they would have to pay the advance or get out.

In the case of Nathan Greenberg, who owns five houses at 1,763 to 1,779 Fulton Avenue, the tenants struck because of insanitary conditions. The landlord asked the committee for an adjustment. He agreed to let the tenants remain in the premises without an increase in rent, and said he would start immediately to put the houses in a sanitary condition. It will require six months for the repairs, and meanwhile the 196 tenants will be free from an increase in rent.

Other cases settled included:

W. & A. Cohen properties: No. 314 to 318 West 145th Street, 539 and 11 to 29 West 160th Street, 518 to 528 West 161st Street. Tenants were raised as high as 50 and 60 per cent. above old rents. Landlord compromised with a flat increase of 15 per cent. over the old rents, giving tenants yearly leases, which they never had before. Tenants, 464.

Samuel Bergman, 1,719 Union Street, Brooklyn, raised rents from $8 to $12 a month, which increased the rentals to $14 a room. He agreed on a reduction to a flat rate of $10 a room and some $9.50 a room. Tenants, 36.

M. Glassheim, property leased to a man named Solatoroff on Ninety-ninth, 100th, and 102d Streets. Mr. Glassheim promised to take back buildings from his lessee, who had raised the rents, and to make repairs, as the buildings were going to ruin. Tenants, 180.

W. A. Taylor, property, 1,155 Dean Street, Brooklyn. Raised rents $8, $10, $12, and $14 a month. Compromised by deducting $900 from the advance and distributing it equally among the apartments. Tenants, 16.

TO SENTENCE DRUG MEN.

Penalty to be Imposed on Three Physicians Aug. 14.

Dr. Solomon Rothman and Louis and William Cohen, druggists, convicted of conspiracy to violate the Harrison drug law by supplying addicts with drugs, will be sentenced Aug. 14, before Federal Judge Fister. Commenting on the conviction yesterday, Daniel L. Porter, Supervising Internal Revenue Agent for this city, said the trial showed the courts were ready to support efforts to bring to justice doctors and druggists who traffic unlawfully in drugs.

"The honest physician and druggist need fear no molestation," he said. "Until now the lack of court decisions on the Harrison act has created fear in the medical profession. I believe ridding the city of unlawful drug traffickers will reduce the number of addicts."

'WHITE TRAIN' HALTS TYPHUS

Red Cross Describes Its Work of Mercy in Siberia.

The American Red Cross made public yesterday the story of the "great white train," which the organization is operating in Siberia, and which is now at Perm, Russia, where there is an epidemic of typhus fever among the military and civilian population. The "white train" is commanded by Capt. Rudoph Bukely of the Red Cross forces in Siberia, and it is today the most famous of all the mercy organizations at work in those parts of Russia where Bolshevism is not in control.

"The reputation of the 'great white train' as an effective weapon in fighting disease," says the Red Cross statement, "has spread far and wide. The train was built for the Allies by the American Red Cross, and originally was intended for service in the maritime provinces of Siberia. Then came the tremendous epidemics of typhus out west, in the heart of Winter, epidemics that ran the number of hospital cases up into the tens of thousands, and the unreported cases into the twenties of thousands.

"When typhus began to die down with the coming of Summer, and the train was taken to Omsk with its supplies all distributed, the question arose as to its disposition. General Knox, head of the British Military Mission, who has seen the train and knows of its operations, telegraphed to Vladivostok: 'The train left Vladivostok on Feb 2 must not be scrapped.'"

The train left Vladivostok on Feb. 2, last and since that time has been continuously engaged in relief work. In the early weeks while the train was in operation typhus broke out among the crew. One of the victims was the first train commander, Capt. F. A. Dallyn of the Canadian forces in Siberia. Capt. Dallyn is now convalescent in Vladivostok, and Capt. Bukely is in command. On some days the train has handled nearly 1,000 typhus patients, and in the course of its travels has visited nearly every important town along the Transsiberian Railway. In an emergency the train can handle 2,000 cases a day.

TRAVIS FINED FOR SPEEDING

Controller Denounces Sentence of Court at Little Falls.

UTICA, N. Y., July 2.—State Controller Eugene M. Travis was arrested in Little Falls yesterday afternoon on the charge of violating the speed laws. He was charged with driving 28 miles an hour. His chauffeur pleaded guilty, and Mr. Travis paid a $10 fine.

He denounced the fine as "blood money," and tried to get in touch with Congressman Snyder, who lives in Little Falls, before he paid it.

GIANTS GET DEEPER INTO SECOND PLACE

SHUT THEM OUT THIS TIME

Benton and Dubuc Are Battered by Moran's Brigade, While Sallee Puzzles His Former Mates.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2.—Unable to solve the delivery of the veteran Slim Sallee and showing loose fielding and erratic base running behind the ineffective pitching of Rube Benton and Jean Dubuc, the Giants were beaten by the Reds today by a score of 6 to 0. Twenty-five thousand fans, jamming the big stands and overflowing onto the field, saw the Reds strengthen their hold on first place.

The crowd which witnessed today's game was far more lenient in its treatment of the Giants than were the spectators yesterday. There was the customary hooting at John McGraw and Benny Kauff, but the unreasonable abuse which marked the outbursts of the fans in the first game of the series was missing today. Many policemen were placed about the park, but they had nothing to do but field an occasional foul ball.

Among the spectators was Governor Cox of Ohio, who, with his official party, occupied a flag-draped box close to the Giants' dugout. Several thousand members of the Knights of Columbus, of which order Pat Moran is a member, were present to pay homage to the Red leader. Just before the game Governor Cox presented a gold watch to Moran on behalf of the order, and McGraw, the recipient of a bunch of flowers from the same organization, was cheered for the first time in his long career by Cincinnati fans.

Giants Get Only Five Hits.

The Giants never had an opportunity to set their powerful machine in motion, as Sallee pitched superbly from the outset. He allowed the erstwhile league leaders only five hits, no two of which were made in any one inning.

Benton, who hurled five innings for the Giants, began to wabble in the second but was saved for the time being by Ross Young, who cut a Red run off at the plate with a perfect throw to Frank Snyder. In the third the Reds hopped on the Rube for four hits and moved off to a safe lead. Dubuc, who relieved Benton at the start of the Reds' half of the sixth, was no more effective than he was yesterday and yielded three runs in the first inning he worked.

Two Giants were retired in the first inning before a man got on the sacks only to remain stranded. After Groh had tossed out Burns and Young had lined to Kopf, Fletcher hammered the ball into the crowd in right centre for three bases. Doyle's best effort was a tap in front of the plate on which Rariden pegged him out at first. Benton set the Reds down in regular order in their half of the first inning.

Kauff opened the second frame by beating out a roller down the third base line, but Zim was thrown out at first by Sallee. Kauff for some unknown reason rounded second base and, straying off the bag, was trapped when Daubert whipped the ball to Kopf. Groh then made a splendid stop and throw of Zimmerman's fast hopper.

In the Reds' half of the second Roush led off with a fly to Young, but Neale doubled over Burns's head. Kopf worked Benton for a pass and Bressler lifted a short fly to Young. Rariden slapped a single to right, but Neale, who attempted to score on the hit, was nailed at the plate on Young's fine throw to Snyder.

Three Runs After Two Are Out.

The Giants were easy for Sallee in the third, going out in regular order. Benton got two of the Reds in their half before they reached him for three runs. Sallee struck out and Rath was tossed out by the Rube. Daubert singled to left. Groh's blunder struck Zim in the shin and caromed off for a base hit. Roush singled to right, scoring Daubert, and Young heaved toward third to catch Groh at that bag. His peg was wide and high and carried far over Zimmerman's head, Groh scoring and Roush dashing around to third. Neale then punched a single to left, scoring Roush. The Reds' attack was halted for the moment when Fletcher threw out Kopf.

Doyle beat out a hit to Daubert after two were out in the fourth, but wandered aimlessly around first base and was picked off by Sallee. The Reds expired in one, two, three order in their half of the inning, as did both clubs in the fifth and the Giants in the first half of the sixth. McCarty was sent up to hit for Benton in the sixth and Dubuc faced the Red batters in their half of the inning.

The French Canadian began by walking Roush. Neale laid down a sacrifice but Dubuc, fielding the tap, hurled the ball past Chase to right field, Roush reaching third. Dubuc then walked Kopf and the bases were jammed. Bressler forced Kopf, Fletcher to Doyle, Roush scoring. Rariden hit to Dubuc, who threw Neale out at the plate.

Sallee Makes Lusty Blow.

Snyder tried to catch Bressler napping off second, but his throw was low and bounded into centre field, Bressler moving along to third. Rariden then stole second, and Sallee hit one into the crowd in right field for three bases, scoring Bressler and Rariden. Rath drew a pass, but Daubert lifted a fly to Doyle.

Young flied to Neale to start the seventh and Fletcher hit to Daubert, reaching first base in safety when Sallee, covering the bag, dropped Daubert's toss. Doyle popped to Rath and Kauff forced Fletcher, Kopf to Rath. Roush tripled with one out in the Reds' half of this inning, but failed to score, as Neale drove a short liner to Burns and Doyle threw out Kopf.

Zimmerman led off in the eighth with a double to left centre, but Chase couldn't get the ball past Groh and Zim was run down between second and third, Chase reaching second on the play. Snyder expired on a pop fly to Rath and Dubuc popped to Daubert. In the Reds' half of the frame Bressler flied to Young and Rariden poked a single to centre. He was forced at second by Sallee, Dubuc to Fletcher, and Slim was in turn forced at the middle bag, Doyle assisted.

Burns was tossed out by Sallee to start the ninth and Young rapped a single to centre. Fletcher forced Young at second, Rath to Kopf, and Doyle brought the pastime to a close by grounding to Daubert.

PHILLIES TAKE TWO GAMES.

Cubs Drop Extra-Inning Battles by Scores of 2 to 1 and 4 to 1.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Philadelphia defeated Chicago in both games of a double-header today, winning the first, 2 to 1, in fourteen innings, and the second, 4 to 1, in ten innings. Through the double victory the visitors advanced from last to sixth place.

The second game was interrupted by the throwing of empty bottles and cushions at Umpire Byron because of his decisions against the home club at third base. After the game several policemen went on the field to escort the umpire, but the crowd only hissed and hooted him.

Paulette's batting was responsible for the winning run being sent across in both games. His double, following a double by Whitted, sent in the winning run in the fourteenth inning of the first contest. It was his single in the tenth inning of the second game that scored Williams with the run which won.

PIRATES HAVE BIG INNING.

Do All Their Scoring in Eighth and Beat Braves, 4 to 2.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 2.—Pittsburgh defeated Boston today by a score of 4 to 2. Fillingim held the locals to two hits and no runs for seven innings, but in the eighth he passed two men and the Pirates bunched two singles and a triple, which scored four runs and won the game. Herzog played his last game with the Bostons. He left for Chicago tonight.

YANKEES SHOVED INTO 4TH PLACE TIE

Yield After 10 Innings to Tigers While 33,000 Alternate Between Joy and Despair.

Up to the eighth inning yesterday the largest crowd which ever saw an American League game at the Polo Grounds had a hilarious time. More than 33,000 people were crowded into the stands and bleachers and they all forgot Coney Island and their week-end trips as the scrapping Yanks were leading Detroit in the aforesaid eighth by a tally of 7 to 6. In reaching this stage the advantage had seesawed along with so much excitement that the populace was almost exhausted from cheering. Deep dejection came before the day was done, the Yanks losing in ten innings by a score of 14 to 8. The defeat shoved the Yanks into a tie for fourth place with St. Louis.

The eighth came along and everybody was happy. Detroit was at the bat and there were two gone when Bobby Veach pumped a screamer into the right field stands, tieing the score. Next came Harry Heilman, who punched another homer into the left field bleachers and pushed the Tigers ahead. All the joy in life disappeared. In the Yanks' half of the eighth Pipp singled and went to second when Shorten fumbled his drive. Pratt sacrificed the runner to third and Ping Bodie crashed a single to left and sent Pipp home with the run which deadlocked the pastime again.

Men took off their nice new straw hats and threw them onto the field. Women got up and waved their arms in glee. The fans in the bleachers jumped around like Indians doing a war dance, and viewing the proceedings all in all, it was about the most tumultuous demonstration that the Yanks have ever excited in this neck of the woods. Harlem rumbled so much that the natives pulled down the windows thinking that another thunderstorm was coming up. Policemen hurried up Eighth Avenue to 155th Street to see what the commotion was all about.

This scrappy come-back of the Yanks carried the game into the tenth inning and then came the big blow-off in which the Tigers rose in their might and knocked the ball game and the Yanks sky-high. Jack Quinn had wabbled many times during the game, but Huggins did not remove him.

The Bitter Ending.

In the tenth Quinn passed Young, Cobb got a double, and Veach was walked purposely. With the bases thus loaded up and no one out, Heilman lacerated the ball for his second homer, driving the pill to the fence in right centre, sweeping the bases as clean as a hound's tooth. After that, Pete Schneider and Nelson both came to the mound and two more runs were forced in by bases on balls. It looked as if the Tigers were going to bat all night. A pleasant day never had a more bitter ending.

Detroit tore off a run in the first inning. After Peck had exterminated Bush at first, Young cracked a double off the right field battlement. Ty Cobb then showed the big gathering how much speed he has. Ty knocked a high hopper to Pratt, and the Georgia Gem outraced Del's flip to Pipp. Veach rapped a grounder to the infield, the ball almost bounding over Quinn's roof. Young romped home on the play and Cobb was galloping toward third as if the Sheriff were after him, when Quinn whipped the ball to Baker and Cobb was out. Veach was caught napping off first, and was peacefully laid away, Quinn to Pipp to Peck.

It took the Yanks less than a jiffy to get that run back in their section of the same stanza. Chick Fewster got a walk and Peck jammed a bouncer toward first which Heilman was just able to knock down. Fewster took too long a chance and tried to race to third, but Heilman chucked him out. Baker singled to left, sending Peck to third. Duffy Lewis and Peck worked the squeeze, Duffy laying down a nifty bunt while Peck romped over the platter with the tying tally, Lewis dying at first in the good cause. Pipp got an infield hit, outrunning Young's toss to first. The inning closed when Pratt hoisted a foul fly to Ainsmith.

The crowd got rid of a tremendous lot of steam and noise in the second inning when Peckinpaugh cudgeled a long home run into the left-field bleachers with two runners aboard. After Ping Bodie had hoisted a fly to Bush at the opening of this momentous occasion, Dutch Leonard lost the location of the scoring dish and generously walked Ruel and Quinn. Fewster lofted a fly to Heilman, who backed into right field to grab the ball.

Enter One Peckinpaugh.

This is Roger Peckinpaugh at the bat. You know who he is, the slugging Yank Captain and as fine a shortstopper as ever wore a glove. Roger pommeled one of Leonard's twisters a terrific belt and jammed it in among the frenzied fans in the sunny seats in left. Seldom has there been such an uproar at the Polo Grounds. They don't make situations at ball games any more exciting than this. The whole mob of 33,000 rose up and made the old welkin ring. Ruel and Quinn trotted home ahead of Peck in a chorus of ear-splitting hurrahs.

The Tigers came back in the third with such fury that the shock silenced the populace. Quinn was peppered unmercifully for five hits and as many runs and yet Manager Huggins kept him on the mound and made him take his medicine. Ainsmith, the first man up, singled to left and Leonard fanned. Bush singled to left and Young deposited a bunt in front of Baker. The Trappe squire picked out the worst time in the world to make an error and fumbled the ball, filling the bases with Ty Cobb coming up.

This lay-out was peaches and cream for Cobb and there was fire in his eye as he walked to the plate. The Yank infield was playing in close and Ty slapped a single back of short, scoring Ainsmith. Veach singled to left and sent Bush and Young home with the tallies which tied the score. Heilman pasted a single to right and Cobb crossed the platter with the unit which put the Tigers in front. Chick Shorten rolled an easy one to Pratt, which Del foozled sadly and Veach grasped the opportunity to score. The depressing occasion came to a close when Jones hit into a double play, Pratt to Peck to Pipp.

At the present moment this may unstring your nerves, but tarry a moment and see what happened in the Yanks' half of the fourth.

A Seething Caldron of Joy.

It didn't seem as if the crowd could possibly get het up again as they did when Peck made his homer in the second, but when Peck came to the bat in the fourth with two aboard, and whacked them both home with a stinging double, the Polo Grounds became a seething caldron of feverish joy. Bodie was out, Young to Heilman, and Ruel skied to Shorten. Quinn got another pass, lucky lad. Fewster laid a bunt down the third-base line and beat out Jones's toss by the wink of an eye. Peck up again. Roger cracked a double into the wilderness between left and centre fields, and Quinn and Fewster started to run. Quinn had a start of a whole base on the Baltimore flyer, but that didn't bother Chick. When Quinn crossed the plate, Fewster had traveled so fast that he was almost stepping on his heels. With the flutter of Fewster's Mercury-like heels over the plate came the tieing run. Most of the voices in the ball yard were pretty hoarse by this time, but that didn't make any difference. The cheering and the shouting continued, and if any one had started a testimonial collection for Peck at that moment the boodle would have looked like another Liberty loan.

Chick Fewster sent his popularity up several more pegs in the sixth. It was his hit which cracked open the 6 to 6 tie and shoved the Yanks in front. Bodie walked in this inning and went down as Bush was tossing Ruel out at first. After Quinn had popped to Bush, Fewster walloped a sizzler through Jones to left field, which almost carried away one of the third baseman's hands. Bodie worked up a lot of speed and rumbled over the plate with the welcome counter. Fewster had his running ambition all heated up and tried to stretch his way to second. Ehmke intercepted Veach's throw to the plate and he whipped it to Young, who tagged the fast-moving Fewster sliding into second.

DISCUSS MAYS CASE TODAY.

Johnson Will Talk Matter Over with Ruppert and Huston.

The owners of the Yankees, Colonel Jacob Ruppert and Colonel T. L. Huston, have taken no action yet in the Carl Mays case as a telegram was received from President Ban Johnson of the American League yesterday stating that he would be in this city on Monday to discuss Mays's suspension.

There is a significant fact about the case which the Yankees' owners believe that Johnson has overlooked. The American League President evidently does not know that Mays reported to Frazee on July 29. It was after this conference with the Boston owner that the deal for the trade of Mays was made.

Colonel Ruppert said yesterday that no move had been made yet to obtain an injunction against the suspension of the pitcher. He said that he would wait for Johnson's visit tomorrow before making any move in this direction.

It is certain that the New York club will take the case to court if Johnson persists in suspending the player for the remainder of the season. There have been numerous cases of players who had refused to report to their clubs being afterwards sold or traded to other clubs. Dutch Leonard refused to report to the Yankees and was later sold to Detroit, but he was not suspended. The New York officials maintain that Johnson's action is one of discrimination against them.

The Yankee players, eager to remain in the fight for the American League pennant, are incensed over the suspension of Mays, and are anxious to have him join the pitching staff as soon as possible. It is expected that when Johnson learns the attitude of the owners of the Yankees on the case the suspension will be lifted. If it isn't, the case will be fought out in the courts.

Mays will be subjected to a heavy fine, which he must pay out of his own pocket. President Ban Johnson announced in Washington last night. Mr. Johnson left last night for New York to confer with the owners of the New York Club, who bought Mays from the Red Sox.

Benjamin Wins on Malba Links.

Frank M. Benjamin won the eighteen-hole medal play handicap contest at the Malba Field Club links yesterday with a card of 95, 26—67. E. J. Cassidy was second, 100, 29—71, and E. A. Ball third, 103, 29—74. High handicap men took all the honors. In the putting competition there was a tie between S. M. Stanley and J. Kendall, which was played off and won by Stanley.

Curves and Bingles.

The Yanks have a habit of not being on their best behavior when their friends are most anxious to see them win. Joy was seldom transformed into gloom more quickly than yesterday when the Yanks blew up.

Roger Peckinpaugh grabbed the lion's share of the honors. He had a home run, a double, a single, and a sacrifice. Peck figured in all of the first six runs scored by the Yanks.

When Ban Johnson comes here tomorrow to meet the Yankee owners on the Mays case he will find a couple of large chips on the shoulders of Colonel Ruppert and Colonel Huston.

The heyday of the American League in Manhattan arrived yesterday, when more than 33,000 enthusiastic fans went to the Polo Grounds. On an August Saturday, when so many folks are on their vacations and week-end trips to the shore and country, it was a flattering indication of the Yankees' hold on New York's interest.

When Nelson was called into the game in the tenth there were three on bases and Ty Cobb was at the bat. The newcomer was just as safe as a man going to look for a leak in the gaspipe with a candle.

Dutch Leonard, who refused to report to the Yankees at the opening of the season and was sold to Detroit, was greeted with hisses when he came to the bat. There was much glee when he retired from the game after the fourth inning.

Cincinnati had a lot of friends among the fans at yesterday's game. When three runs for Cincinnati were posted on the scoreboard there was a long round of applause, and when another trio of tallies went up for the Reds the demonstration became an outburst.

Ty Cobb had a great day. He made four hits, one a double, and scored twice. This is the fiftieth occasion in Cobb's major league career that he has made four hits in one game.

Both the Yanks and Detroit will have a day of rest tomorrow. The game scheduled for this afternoon was moved up from Monday.

Ty Cobb jumped into third base in the eighth inning with his spikes gleaming. Baker made a nervy move when he stuck the ball right into Cobb's feet and touched him out. The crowd hissed Tyrus long and vociferously, for his spikes cut Baker's hand slightly.

Ty hit a foul fly to the roof of the grand stand so hard in the tenth that he knocked off one of the concrete decorations near the flag poles.

DODGERS WIN FIRST GAME FROM CARDS

Zach Wheat's Bat Plays a Leading Part in His Team's 3 to 2 Victory.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 2.—Branch Rickey utilized fourteen of his baseball players here this afternoon in an effort to down the Brooklyn Dodgers in the opening game of a three-game series, but all the managerial strategy went for naught. The Dodgers, starting with a one-run advantage over the Mound City boys, finished the game with a similar margin in their favor. The score was 3 to 2.

Zachariah Wheat, Brooklyn's popular Captain, played the leading rôle in his team's success. In four trips to the plate the slugging left fielder cracked out three hits, leading the assault on Oscar Tuero, the Cuban twirler, who has dazzled the Dodgers in many previous games this season. In Wheat's collection of safeties was a resounding double, which came in the seventh, and started the Dodgers on what turned out to be their winning effort. As a result of Wheat's heavy bludgeon work two Brooklyn runs were registered.

Leon Cadore started on the mound for the Dodgers and pitched well until the eighth inning when he cracked. Manager Robinson quickly summoned Sherrod Smith to hill duty and the day was saved. Sherrod's left-hand hooks and slants retired the lowly Missourians in the eighth and ninth without any danger of a threatened score.

Tuero's pitching was brilliant, but behind him his team mates cracked just when a break in the St. Louis defense would benefit the Dodgers. The Brooklynites didn't lose any time in taking advantage of these circumstances either. In the midst of a St. Louis rally in the seventh the Cuban Cubeb was relieved of duty to make room for Shotton, a pinch hitter. Joe Woodward finished the game without being scored upon.

In the course of the game Ivan Olson, the aggressive Brooklyn shortstop, unburdened himself of a brace of errors, which, fortunately, did not result harmfully for the Dodgers. Olson's first misplay came in the second inning, when he let Miller's grounder through him. The St. Louis first baseman reached second on the fielding misdemeanor, but perished there. In the sixth Olson had a lot of trouble getting his hands around Hornsby's grounder, and Hornsby reached first safely. The transformed shortstop didn't get any further in his travels.

The Dodgers went into the lead with the start of the contest. Olson, the first man to face Tuero, pickled one of the Cuban's offerings to centre for a single. Ivan reached second while Lavan threw out Johnston, and took third while Tuero was disposing of Tommy Griffith at first. Zach Wheat started his day's work here with a sharp single through the box, scoring Olson. Hy Myers tried to lift the cover off the ball, but fanned in the process.

Tuero tightened his grip after this and refused to permit any familiarity with his offerings. As a result Brooklyn bats were comparatively idle until the seventh, when the Dodgers opened up in an assault on the Cuban and, aided with a loosening of the St. Louis defense, scored the runs which resulted in a Brooklyn victory.

Starting the frame Zach Wheat got his third hit of the day, a double over first to right. Myers sacrificed and Big Ed. Konetchy pumped a single into left, Wheat racing home from second. Konetchy pilfered second and continued to third without hesitation when Clemons' throw to second went high and wild. Rogers Hornsby fumbled Chuck Ward's grounder, and Konetchy scored, while Ward reached first safely. Chuck started prancing about on the first corner, however, and didn't stop until he was caught flat-footed with a lightning-like throw from Tuero to Miller.

Branch Rickey rearranged his lineup somewhat in the St. Louis half of this frame and retrieved two of the runs. Miller started the inning with a double to centre. Lavan skied to Zach Wheat and J. Smith beat out a bunt to the box, Miller taking third. Shotton was injected to bat for Tuero. Zach Wheat, trying to catch Miller asleep at third, threw wild to Ward and the St. Louis first baseman scored, J. Smith taking second. Shotton then drew a pass and Smith stole third. Baird was sent in to run for Shotton. Heathcote beat out a scratch hit to Olson, Smith scoring, while Baird went to second. There was no further scoring, however, for Stock flied to Zach Wheat and Hornsby popped to Johnston.

Woodward took the mound for St. Louis in the eighth and was nicked for a single by Olson. A snappy double play, however, crushed Brooklyn's hopes for additional scores.

His rough going in the seventh took all the effectiveness out of Cadore and he started the eighth with nothing but the glove on his hand. McHenry rapped a single to left by way of greeting Cadore in this inning and Clemons followed with a one-base bump to the same garden, sending McHenry to second. Manager Robinson took hold of the situation without further ado and replaced Cadore with Sherry Smith. Sherry rose to the occasion. Miller died by the air route to Griffith, McHenry advancing to third after the catch. Clemons tried to reach second on the play but expired. Ward threw out Lavan, retiring the side.

Schultz and Dilhoefer were sent in as pinch hitters in a last inning effort at victory by Manager Rickey, but nothing came of the strategy and Brooklyn's lead was maintained.

LUDERUS SETS NEW RECORD

Phillies' Initial Sacker Has Played in 479 Consecutive Games.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 2.—According to local records, Fred Luderus, first baseman of the Philadelphia Nationals, today made a new record for playing in consecutive games. In the first game of today's double-header at Chicago, Luderus equaled Eddie Collins' record of 478 straight games, and exceeded those figures by playing in the second contest.

INTERNATIONAL RECORDS.

Among the regulars, Charley See of the Rochester Hustlers is the leading batsman in the International League. In seventy-five contests Charley banged all sorts of twirling for the splendid average of .394; Fritz Maisel of the Orioles smashed out the most base hits, 127 to date. Dunn's third sacker also scored the greatest number of runs; in ninety-two games Maisel tallied just eighty-six runs, with Otis Lawrey, a team mate, showing the way to the base runners with forty pilfers; Frank of Baltimore tops the hurlers with sixteen victories against three defeats.

The records, including games played Thursday, July 31, follow:

N. E. LEAGUE DISBANDS.

Third of Six Original Clubs Withdraws and President Acts.

PORTLAND, Maine, Aug. 2.—Upon receiving word that the Haverhill Club of the New England Baseball League had disbanded after playing a double-header at Fitchburg today, President John A. Donnelly announced that the season ended with the playing of today's games.

"We shall reserve our territory, however," he added, "and we hope to come back next year."

The league opened its season on April 10 with six clubs, but about a month ago the Lowell and Lawrence teams dropped out. Haverhill's collapse left but three clubs and Mr. Donnelly said "it was deemed best to bring the season to a close."

Palmero Now with Des Moines Club.

Emilio Palmero, a Cuban pitcher, who several years ago was given a trial by Manager John McGraw of the Giants, is giving his efforts now for the cause of the Des Moines Club, which organization recently purchased the Cuban from Minneapolis of the American Association.

Sisler and Cravath Top List of Batsmen in Major Leagues

Five Members of Giants Batting Over .300, While Peckinpaugh Is Only Yankee in Select Class.

Gavvy Cravath, who has dropped from the regular ranks to act as the Phillies' manager and pinch hitter, is holding his place at the top of the hitters in the National League with an average of .353; Zack Wheat punched out the most base hits, 107. Heine Groh has tallied the most runs, 56, and George Cutshaw of the Pirates upholds his team's nickname, he is the leading base stealer with 24 stolen bases.

George Sisler is atop the hitters in the American League. The Brownie star leads his company with a batting percentage of .359; Sisler has punched out the greatest number of base hits in the majors to date, 120; Roger Peckinpaugh heads the run-scorers with 69 tallies, while a tie exists for the most stolen bases; Sisler and Doc Johnston stole 22 bases apiece.

Following are the records, which include games played up to Thursday, July 31.

TILDEN AND RICHARDS WIN TENNIS FINAL FOR SEABRIGHT BOWLS

TENNIS CHAMPIONS GET NEW TROPHIES

Tilden and Richards Defeat Hall and Beekman in Final for Seabright Bowls.

VICTORY IN STRAIGHT SETS

Losers Put Up Sterling Fight, but Are Not Quite Able to Cope with National Titleholders.

Special to The New York Times.

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 2.—The national indoor and outdoor doubles champions, William T. Tilden 2d. and Vincent Richards, became the first holders of the new Seabright Bowls this afternoon by defeating Walter Merrill Hall and Leonard Beekman in straight sets, 6—3, 6—4, 6—1, in the final round of the revived invitation tournament at the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club. A large and brilliant gallery was in attendance today, and the quality of the tennis was in keeping with the gala spirit of the occasion.

It was a spectacular match to watch, with all four players keyed up to their best efforts, and although the titleholders won by an impressive margin they were far from outclassing their opponents. In fact, with a little more steadiness at crucial points the losers might easily have carried the encounter into four or five sets, and even in the seemingly one-sided final session they were always dangerous. Tilden, who yesterday won the new Singles Bowl by his victory over Beekman, was the dominant figure on the court this afternoon, playing in his most sensational style and with far more consistent success than he has recently enjoyed. He had unusual control of his fast forehand drive, a stroke which, in his singles game, he has lately been inclined to shelve in favor of a more accurate but softer chop. Finding, however, that speed was bringing him clean placement aces today, he let out more and more with his free swing, and in the closing games was killing the ball off the ground in irresistible style. Tilden's service was steady and fairly severe; he volleyed and smashed dependably, and occasionally resorted to a lob which had all the virtues of an offensive stroke. It was an exceedingly good exhibition of keen doubles play.

Richards, Too, in Great Form.

The youthful Richards was not far behind his partner in effectiveness. His sharply-angled volleys, many coming from very fast drives, were a constant menace to the other side, and overhead he proved the hardest and safest hitter of the four. He found his chopping placement shots good for many an opening, and often used a full swinging drive, although this shot had a tendency to travel beyond the baseline.

For the losers, Hall was generally reliable, but with streaks of uncertainty overhead and a bad habit of leaving his alley unprotected as he came to the net on service. His drives were fast and accurate, with the forehand somewhat steadier than the reverse. Beekman's greatest weakness was in the return of service, and his failure to put the ball in play nipped many a potential rally in the bud. He was inclined also to be overmodest in his attitude toward neutral shots down the centre of the court, and a number of comparatively gentle returns were thus scored as clean placements against his side. The young Princetonian, however, did heroic work in recovering the terrific smashes that came his way, and generally held up his end in the quick exchange of volleys close up. The stroke analysis shows that the champions won chiefly because of their superiority in placement shots, the total of errors being practically the same for both teams. It can easily be argued that a somewhat longer experience in partnership, with the consequent co-operation in covering the court, would have bettered the showing of the losers materially.

Tilden won the toss and began the service auspiciously by capturing a love game. Hall squared the count with the loss of only one point, but Richards repeated the coat of whitewash for a lead of 2—1. Beekman tied it up again with a deuce game, and, after Tilden had once more won his service, the first break came against Hall, for a 4—2 advantage. Richards made it 5—2 after two calls of deuce, and although Beekman scored again by serving a love game, the set went at 6—3 on Tilden's delivery.

A Close and Thrilling Set.

The second was closer and more exciting. Service alternated in winning up to 4—all, the losers getting their last lead of the set on a love game in which three rousing smashes figured prominently, one of them coming off a high bounder by Beekman. Although leading in the eighth game at 40—15, the champions had considerable difficulty in winning, Richards breaking his racquet in making a smash, but serving and volleying the long deuce game to a successful conclusion. The break then came again on Hall's service, a beautiful smash by Richards being followed by the same player's winning cross-court shot, with a drive by Tilden to Hall's feet as a climax. Tilden then put the set away at 6—4 with a love game, Richards crowning some fine volleys with a big overhead kill which bounced to the top of the back screen, and another shot at Hall's feet accounting for the final point.

Hall's overhead went temporarily to pieces at the start of the third set, resulting in an immediate break in favor of the champions. He first flubbed an easy smash, then sent over a soft one that Tilden easily drove through Beekman, and finally hit one out for the vantage point. Beekman fell into similar habits, failing to kill three successive short lobs by Richards, and then completely succumbing to a deep one from Tilden. The leaders went ahead to 2—0, after a miscall at the baseline from the Philadelphian and a desperate attempt at recovery by his partner. The second break of the set came in the third game, although Hall served two aces, one of them clean, the other made possible by a bad bound. A double fault contributed to the upset, after a long deuce game. It was 4—0 with another deuce session, the titleholders trailing at 15—40 through bad errors, but running out when Beekman netted twice in costly fashion.

Winners Trying for Kills.

The Princetonian, however, came back with a successful service for his team's only score of the set, both Tilden and Richards practicing strokes and trying to end each rally with a single shot. Remarkable getting of Tilden's hard smashes failed to save the losing combination in the next, a smash by Richards down the centre proving a heartbreaker, and sending the score up to 5—1. The final game was all Tilden. After giving Hall a lead of 40—0 by errors off service, he drove one with terrific speed, and duplicated the stroke when the server showed too much mercy toward an easy one overhead. Two more clean drives by the tall Philadelphian, mixed in with some errors and a timely double fault, brought up the match point, and it was Tilden again who finished the job by hooking the first serve back-handed to the opposite alley for another placement ace and the set, 6—1. His record showed the remarkable total of five cleanly earned points in this one game, a fitting close to a spectacular afternoon's work.

The doubles final was followed by an exhibition match of mixed doubles, in which Miss Helene Pollak and T. R. Pell opposed Miss Florence Ballin and Axel Gravem.

HERZOG TRADED TO CUBS.

Pick and Mann in Deal — Nehf Holding Out on Giants.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 2.—Another big trade in baseball circles was consummated today when Charles Lincoln Herzog, second baseman of the Boston Braves, was traded to Chicago for Left Fielder Mann and Second Baseman Pick. Later in the season the Bostons are to have other players from Chicago or a large sum of money, not stated today.

Herzog played his last game with the Bostons today, having one hit out of four times at bat. He was charged with one error, which had nothing to do with the loss of the game by Boston.

When the Braves were here on the first Eastern trip six weeks ago, President William Veeck of the Chicago Club came to Pittsburgh and made an attempt to get Herzog at the time when Hollacher was incapacitated, but Herzog tried to hold the Chicagos to a long term contract at the salary he is receiving from Boston, $10,000 a year, which proposition was turned down by the Chicago Club. It is now supposed that Herzog has won his point, although nothing could be learned from him after the game today, except that he got "what he wanted." He left here tonight to join his new team, and will play against the Phillies tomorrow, while Pick and Mann are expected here on Monday.

Arthur Nehf, who was sold yesterday to New York, was still here today, and asserted that he must have a big increase in salary before he would sign with the Giants.

WESTERN FLAG RACE TIGHT.

Only 56 Points Separate Leader and Trailer in Cowboy League.

The race for the pennant in the Western League is the closest in that circuit in its history. Only fifty-six points separate the first and last clubs, St. Joseph being on top, with an average of .533, while Joplin, with .437, is in last place. Sioux City is trailing the leaders by 20 points, and Des Moines and Wichita are tied for third place, 27 points behind St. Joseph. Omaha and Wichita also are tied, 39 points behind the pacemakers.

"This is the most remarkable race in the history of baseball," said Al R. Tearney, President of the league, yesterday, in announcing the official standing. "The leadership of the league has changed several times this season, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Des Moines, Tulsa, and Sioux City holding this honor one time or other."

The official standing, including games of Sunday, July 27, follows:

BROWNS DEFEAT MACKMEN.

Rogers Is Hit Hard and Supported Poorly—Dugan to Rejoin Team.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 2.—St. Louis took "its second straight" game in the series with Philadelphia here today, 5 to 2. Rogers was hit hard by St. Louis, and was given poor support. Philadelphia got nine hits off Sothoron, but the St. Louis pitcher was effective with men on bases. Acting Manager Harry Davis announced that he had received word from Dugan, the Philadelphia shortstop, who, it was thought, had jumped the club. Dugan is sick at his home, and will join the club when he recovers. Louis Groh, brother of Third Baseman Groh of Cincinnati, played third base for the Athletics.

EYES OF TENNISDOM TURN TO NEWPORT

Glory of City That Cradled Game in America Is Revived in This Week's Tourney.

The glory of Newport, as the centre of American tennis, promises to be revived in the invitation tournament of the coming week, an event which will be second only to the national championship in importance and interest. Up to 1915 the history of tennis in the United States was practically identical with the history of tennis at the Newport Casino. It was here that the first American court was built in 1876, and when, in 1881, the United States National Lawn Tennis Association was organized in New York City, Newport was unanimously chosen as the logical place for holding the "all-comers" championship each year. It was at Newport that Richard D. Sears, in 1881, won the first American title, an honor which he retained for seven years, outclassing all his competitors until forced to retire unbeaten because of an injury to his shoulder.

Sears was taught his tennis by Dr. James Dwight, the "father of American tennis," a great player in his day, although never able to defeat his brilliant pupil in tournament competition.

The game of our first champion is thus described by H. W. Slocum, Jr., upon whom his mantle fell in 1888: "The contestants, with a single exception, played the base-line game, and that exception was Mr. Sears, who continued his volleying tactics at the service line. The others were unfamiliar with this style of play, and each one who was drawn against the Boston man seemed impelled, as if by a magnet, to direct every return across the centre of the net, and straight into the hands of Mr. Sears, who calmly tapped the ball first to one side of the court and then to the other, and thus won the first championship of the United States without an effort. The racket used by Mr. Sears weighed 16 ounces, and was much too heavy for ordinary play, but not for his purpose, which was merely to stop or block the ball. The harder his despairing adversaries drove the ball against the heavy racket the harder it went back. Lobbing or tossing was then unknown, and he was therefore relieved from the greatest danger to which his style of play could have been subjected."

It was at Newport also, in 1890, that O. S. Campbell, the third man to hold the national title, electrified the gallery by his reckless net play; the first case on record of the type of game afterward made famous by the Californians. Campbell's reign lasted for three years, when he was superseded by Robert D. Wrenn, who first worked out the proper balance of ground strokes and volleying, and may be said to have laid the real foundation of modern American tennis. His greatest contribution to the game was the "centre theory," which argued that shots down the middle of the court could be followed to the net far more safely than placements to the sides, the defensive player having a smaller choice of angles and actually less room for his return. It is a theory which is followed almost religiously by modern volleyers.

Four years of supremacy by R. D. Wrenn were interrupted by the successful challenge of F. H. Hovey for a single season, and in 1898 Malcolm D. Whitman began a proprietorship of the title which lasted for three years, ending with the advent of William A. Larned, the man who stayed at the top longer than any other player in the history of the American game, dropping out temporarily for service in the Spanish war, but returning later for a series of triumphs which ended only when the youthful energy of Comet McLoughlin battered its way through the old master's game. Meanwhile the English star, H. L. Doherty, and the Americans, Holcombe Ward, Beals Wright, and W. J. Clothier, had all taken a turn at the championship, and, just when McLoughlin began to appear unbeatable he was upset by the amazing brilliancy of R. N. Williams, 2d. This match, played in the Summer of 1914, after the red-haired Californian had defeated both Norman Brookes and Anthony F. Wilding in the Davis Cup contests, marked the close of the national tournaments at Newport.

The scene shifted in the following year to the West Side Club at Forest Hills, L. I., where William M. Johnston of California overcame both McLoughlin and Williams for the championship, losing his title to the latter in 1916 after the greatest individual tennis match on record.

But Newport continued to hold invitation tournaments each Summer, and it was there that Ichiya Kumagae of Japan first astounded America by defeating the great Johnston, who at the time was still champion. It was at Newport also that the Doherty brothers lifted the American doubles championship in 1902, successfully defending it the following year on the same courts. All the great tennis players of America, and most of the experts of Europe as well, have appeared at some time on the turf of the Newport Casino.

With the Australians, Brookes, Patterson, Thomas, and Lycett, starting their American invasion there this week, and with McLoughlin coming on again from the Coast to try his skill against Williams, Johnston, Tilden, Murray, Kumagae, and other stars, Newport will indeed have revived its ancient glory by the time this tournament is completed.

CLEVELAND COURT WINNER.

Sixth City Gets Permanent Possession of Inter-Lake Trophy.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Aug. 2.—Cleveland won permanent possession of the Inter-lake Tennis Association championship bowl this afternoon by winning six of the nine matches with the Detroit Tennis Club.

Detroit took second honors, and Toledo and Buffalo divided third honors, each team winning three matches. Cleveland had two legs on the trophy, and Detroit one. Results in the initial day's play Friday paired Cleveland and Detroit in the finals today.

PLAYER TRANSFERS IN MAJOR LEAGUES

More Than 40 Instances of Ball Tossers Changing Teams This Year.

During the last few days New York baseball fans have witnessed the closing of two important deals that are expected to have important bearings on the pennant fights being waged by the Giants and the Yankees. In each instance a New York club gave up two pitchers to get one, the Giants turning over Cecil Causey and Joe Oeschger for Arthur Nehf, while the Yankees delivered Allan Russell and Bob McGraw to acquire ownership to Carl Mays. These transfers simply added one more chapter to a series of changes affecting major league players that have been occurring this season with unusual frequency.

This is a record-making season in many respects, and the deals which have been put through since the curtain was rung up on the two major league pennant races in the latter part of April also have reached a top mark. A few seasons back transfers during the playing season were infrequent. This has changed considerably, but in no one campaign has there been any such activity in the transfer of players from one major league club to another as has been the case this year. More than forty transfers have been recorded to date.

At the present time every major league club, with the lone exception of the Cincinnati Reds, has at least one player on its roster who started the season with another big league combination. Some teams have several. This is particularly true of the Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and St. Louis clubs of the National League, all of which have gone heavily into the trading business since the season opened. In the American League there has not been so much passing of players from club to club, yet there has been more than the usual number of transfers.

Many Giants Have Departed.

A glance over the playing rosters today, and a comparison of them with the rosters that the clubs had at the start of the season, show many shifts. Take the Giants for example. Even before the deal which shunted Causey and Oeschger to the Braves for Nehf, McGraw had sent Jim Thorpe along to the Braves after having the noted Indian on his club for six seasons. Ferdie Schupp, another Giant of long service, is now wearing the livery of the St. Louis Cardinals, to which club he was traded about two weeks ago. Dave Robertson, who was with the Giants for a few days this season, is now with the Chicago Cubs. George Smith, one-time Columbia pitcher, who started the current season with the McGraw men, is now performing in the uniform of the Phillies. On the same club is Eddie Sicking, an infielder, who made the training trip with the Giants and played several games with the club in the early part of the season. Pat Ragan, picked up by the Giants after he had been let out by the Braves, was released a few days ago and quickly picked up with the Chicago White Sox.

The Cardinals also have let out many players who were with the club at the start of the season. Frank Snyder, rated as one of the best catchers in the game, now wears a New York uniform. The same is true of Miguel Gonzales. The Cuban, while he has not worn a St. Louis uniform this season, was the property of the club for some time after the pennant campaign got under way. Walton Cruise has shifted from the Cardinals to the Braves. Lee Meadows, the bespectacled boxman who was regarded as one of the best pitchers on the St. Louis staff at the start of the season, now is a consistent winner for the Phillies. With the same club is Infielder Gene Paulette, one of Branch Rickey's regulars up to a few weeks ago. To predict last April that the Cards would part with such players as Snyder, Gonzales, Meadows, Cruise, and Paulette would have earned a laugh in the Mound City, but all five are wearing the uniforms of other major league clubs today.

The Phillies, too, have done considerable in the transfer line. Douglas Baird, obtained during the Winter in a big deal with the Cardinals, has been sent back to the St. Louis Club in a later deal. Frank Woodward, who pitched some fine ball against the Giants early in the season, also is with the Cardinals today. The same is true of Elmer Jacobs, who was a steady winner for the Phillies last year after he had been obtained in the trade that sent Erskine Mayer to the Pirates. Another player who started the season with the Phils and is now with another combination is Joe Oeschger. Joe had traveled considerably. First he was picked up by Manager McGraw, and he remained with the Giants until the deal was closed with the Boston Club last Friday for Art Nehf.

Six Braves Have Changed.

The Boston Braves opened the season with Nehf, Ragan, Tragesser, Herzog, and Blackburne in their squad and Al Wickland as their property, though he had not reported. Today Nehf is listed as a member of the New York Giants, Blackburne and Tragesser are with the Phillies, Ragan has gone to the White Sox after a sojourn with the Giants, and Wickland has transferred his allegiance to the New York Club of the American League. This is one of a few cases of interleague transfer. Herzog was transferred yesterday to the Cubs.

Other National League clubs have not figured so extensively in the movement of ball tossers. The Brooklyn Club had Lee Magee as one of its infield regulars when the season opened, and today Lee can be found with the Chicago Cubs. Larry Cheney was counted upon as one of Uncle Robbie's regular boxmen, and today the veteran moist-ball expert is with the Boston Braves. These are the only instances of players going from the Dodgers to other major league clubs.

Two Pirates and Four Cubs of last April are now listed with other clubs. Tony Boeckel was regular third baseman at Pittsburgh when the season opened, and now he is filling a similar rôle at Boston for the Braves. Lee King was one of Hugo Bezdek's outfielders, but Hugo decided that he was not needed, and now King is wearing a New York uniform. Killduff of the Cubs is with Brooklyn, Douglas with the Giants, while Mann and Pick have been traded to the Braves. As mentioned above, the Cincinnati Club has not been affected. The Reds have not taken any player who opened the season with some other club, nor are any of the Reds of last April now drawing salary from another major league club.

In the American League.

In the American League the Yankees have made deals which involved the transfer of four players to whose services they held title when the season opened, Allan Russell, Bob McGraw, and Bill Lamar were sent to the Boston Red Sox, and the last named has just been turned back to the minors. The Yankees also transferred Pitcher Dutch Leonard to the Detroit Tigers, the pitcher failing to report to the New York Club.

Three Tigers of last April now are drawing salaries elsewhere in the majors, while another was taken by the Yankees and sent to the minors. That player was Willie Mitchell, the veteran southpaw, who is now performing in the Pacific Coast League. He passed out of the majors only after the Yankees had taken him. Eric Erickson is pitching for the Senators, Bill James is with the Boston Club, and Ellison is now with the Pittsburgh Pirates, having been claimed through the waiver process. This is another case of an interleague transfer.

The Red Sox have sent Pitcher Carl Mays to the Yankees and two other notables of the cast—Jack Barry and Amos Strunk—to the Philadelphia Club. Barry refused to report, and at the present time, is out of the game. Strunk accepted the transfer and is playing a regular outfield position for the Mackmen. Jean Dubuc, who made the training trip with the Red Sox, is now with the Giants.

The Washington Club sent Pitcher Thompson to the Mackmen, but he failed to stick there, and now is back in the minors. Doc Ayers, long a fixture with the Senators, is now wearing the uniform of the Detroit Tigers. Johnny Lavan, owned by the Senators, has been transferred since the start of the season to the St. Louis Club of the National League in another interleague deal.

Connie Mack has participated in the transfer of three players from his club to others. He sent Outfielder and Captain Bobby Roth to the Boston Red Sox, at the same time sending Infielder Maurice Shannon to Boston. He sent Second Baseman Grover to the Washington Club.

Two Browns of last Spring are now laboring elsewhere. Pitcher Tom Rogers is with the Athletics, and Pitcher Grover Lowdermilk is with the Chicago White Sox. Manager Gleason of the White Sox did not send any players to other major league clubs, but picked up Lowdermilk when the St. Louis Club asked for waivers. The only player to go from the Cleveland Indians to another major league club is the veteran Terry Turner. After playing continuously with Forest City aggregations since 1904, Turner drew an unconditional release a short time ago and soon caught on with the Mackmen.

NEW YORK NAVY TEAM WINS.

Defeats Boston Aggregation, 4 to 3, in Game at Ebbets Field.

A mighty three-bagger from the bat of Otto Catenacci, portly right fielder of the New York Navy Yard baseball team, transformed gloom into joy yesterday at Ebbets Field and gave the local navy yard workers a victory over the Boston Navy Yard team in the opening game of the Atlantic Coast championship tournament. The score was 4 to 3, the Bay State workers fighting right up to the last ditch before submitting to defeat.

Catenacci's clout came in the fifth inning, helping to a trio of runs which placed the game beyond recovery by the Bay State yardmen. Entering the fifth the score was deadlocked at 1 to 1, and the majority of the 7,000 fans who turned out for the clash were yelling wildly for a New York rally. It came.

Starting the frame Harry Fennell nicked Carney for a single to centre. Moran sacrificed, and after Becker drew a pass Fennell stole third, his second successful pilfer of the far corner in as many attempts. Catenacci here walloped the pill to the far reaches of left field, where it carromed off the scoreboard while Fennell and Becker raced over the plate, and Catenacci hot-footed to third as fast as his stubby legs could carry him. Clausen fanned and then Carney walked Testut. The latter almost immediately went down for second, drawing a weird throw from Catcher Peabody, which enabled Catenacci to decorate the rubber with what proved the winning run for the local contingent.

While Catenacci's terrific drive was the principal factor in the New York triumph, it was by no means the only one. Fennell contributed to the victory with a brace of hits which resulted in as many runs and he played a sterling game at shortfield. Charles Lenny, a Brooklyn semi-pro pitcher, took care of the defensive work for the victors with a brand of twirling that impressed the large crowd. Lenny yielded but six hits and fanned seven of the rival batters. He gave evidences of weakening in the closing half of the game, when he issued three passes, but fortunately none of them figured in the scoring. "Nixey" Carney opposed Lenny, but took the short end of the duel after the second inning.

This game was the first of a series of three. The second game will be played in Boston Aug. 23. The latter contest was originally scheduled for Aug. 16, but during the game yesterday word was received of the change in date.

TWO SOX TEAMS DIVIDE.

Boston Takes Opener, 5 to 3; Chicago Gets Second, 10 to 1.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 2.—Before a crowd of 31,500 fans, Boston and Chicago divided honors today, Boston winning the first game, 5 to 3, and losing the second, 10 to 1. Ground rules were necessary.

Russell and McGraw, obtained by Boston from New York in the Mays deal, both pitched, the former relieving Musser in the first game after the latter had been hit hard, while McGraw pitched the ninth inning of the second game, relieving Pennock. Russell pitched well, and with good support and opportune batting by the Red Sox got credit for a win over Cicotte.

In the second game, Pennock pitched no-hit ball until the seventh, when Chicago scored once, following it up with eight runs in the eighth. In this inning Umpire Moriarty was hit on the temple with a ball thrown by Catcher Walters and collapsed, but finished the game. Felsch, McInnis, and Vitt contributed sensational fielding plays.

DAVIS GETS WESTERN TITLE.

Defeats Burdick in Five-Set Final of Tennis Tourney.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 2.—In a game abounding in spectacular shots, Willis E. Davis, the California player, won the Western tennis championship in the final of the men's singles here today by defeating Ralph Burdick, Chicago, 10—8, 4—6, 6—3, 2—6, 6—2.

Kansas City Women Gain Title.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 2.—Defeating Miss Mary Katherine Voorhees of Evanston, Ill., and Miss Carrie B. Neely, Chicago, in a hard fought three-set match, Miss Marjorie Hires and Miss Ivy Seavey, both of Kansas City, won the women's doubles championship of the Western Tennis Tournament late today. The scores were 7—5, 4—6, 7—5.

READING SMOTHERS BRUINS IN HITFEST

Newark's Crippled Team Loses Its Seventh Straight Game by Score of 7 to 4.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 2.—Newark's crippled team could not get hits with men on bases here today, and lost its seventh straight game to Reading, 7 to 4. Thirteen players left high and dry on the base paths accounted for the Bears' defeat. Patsy Donovan used three pitchers in an attempt to stem the tide; but the Reading players, who seem to be on a batting rampage, hit anything and everything tossed up, while Newark hit often, but not when hits were most needed.

Keefe, who started the pitching for Reading, twirled excellent ball for seven innings and allowed but five hits. He also hit the ball hard himself, getting three hits out of four trips up. After he tripled Manager Doolan took him out, figuring he had winded himself running around the bases, and sent Brown to the mound. The latter held Newark safe during the remainder of the game.

Mike Konnick, Reading's catcher, who is being watched by the big league scouts, hit safely four times yesterday and got three hits today, a triple and two singles. Jacob, for Newark, did the same thing, while Miller, the Newark first sacker, hit the longest drive on the grounds this season when he drove the ball to the centre-field fence for a home run. Snooks Dowd, secured from the Athletics, played for Newark, but did not do anything sensational.

SKEETERS WIN AND LOSE.

Orioles Lucky to Get Even Break with Zellers as Iron Man.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 2.—Jersey City and Baltimore divided honors here today in their double attraction, the locals winning the first game, 4 to 2, while the Skeeters registered a 3 to 2 victory in the closing number.

Rube Zellers, after being beaten in the first game, adorned the pitching peak in the second encounter, and while he was keeping the Orioles' hits well scattered the Donovanites got to Lefty Kneisch at opportune times. Siebold hurled masterly ball for Baltimore in the first game and was accorded sensational support. Zellers, too, pitched a fine article of ball, but errors behind him were responsible for the majority of counters.

MISS WAGNER AGAIN VICTOR.

Reaches Final in L. I. Tennis Title Play by Beating Miss Handy.

Miss Marie Wagner of New York won her way to the final round of the women's tennis championship of Long Island yesterday by defeating Miss Edith Handy in straight sets, 7—5, 6—4. She will play Mrs. E. V. Lynch this afternoon for the championship. Miss Handy put up a splendid resistance against the steady driving of the former indoor and New York State titleholder. After holding her close all through the first set, she ran into a lead of 4—0 in the second, and seemed about to square the match. But Miss Wagner put on full steam for a great pull-up and captured six straight games by the most brilliant of all-around play.

5 Rousing Midsummer Hits

Real record-breaking Emerson Records! Emerson song hits that keep singing themselves over and over and over in your memory—Emerson dance hits that say "Step lively, folks!"—and never fail to score.

For instance:

DIXIE BLUES

The Louisiana Five is a winning combination—beyond all doubt they're the Kings of Syncopation. They impart a world of melody to all their instruments. They are wonderful and great—irresistible—immense! Just try to sit 'em out, if you doubt what we say. Your feet, if they are normal, will insist on getting gay—

Also:

HIMALYA—A Song of the Far East

Close your eyes and listen to this Oriental strain—it breathes an Eastern fragrance that is sweet as summer rain. You detect the smoke of incense on the perfumed atmosphere—the tom-toms break in weirdly on your fascinated ear. "Himalya" wafts you to a land ten thousand miles away—a land of unrealities where everything is "play".

MAN O' WAR HEADS FINE FIELD AT SPA

Two-Year-Old Scores Impressive Victory in United States Hotel Stakes.

MILKMAID WINS KENNER

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Aug. 2.—The Glen Riddle Farm's unbeaten Man o' War, which came to Saratoga with a string of five victories to his credit, proved again today that he is truly great racer, and that he must be rated at the top of his division until a conqueror appears. This son of Fair Play captured the $10,000 United States Hotel Stakes against a field which included some of the smartest two-year-olds of the season, and did so in such a convincing manner as to surprise even some of those who had been sounding his praise.

After the race it was quite generally conceded that Man o' War was the best two-year-old that had been seen this season and, therefore, the most likely to be crowned champion of his age. This concession was made notwithstanding the presence here of the fleet Miss Jemima and Panoply, among others that have yet to meet Man o' War.

It was in this same race a year ago that the fleet Billy Kelly, regarded as an outsider by the speculators, rose to his fame, and he did not win as handily as did Man o' War today. The Glen Riddle Farm's youngster was far the best of his field, and among others which had to bow to him in defeat were H. P. Whitney's Upset and Bonnie Mary, which has won two important juvenile stake events.

Unlike Billy Kelly last year, Man o' War was made favorite, but at times better than even money was offered on his chances. Despite his clean record, this race was regarded as the first real test for him, since it brought him into competition with some of the fleet ones which were considered better than anything he had beaten.

Johnny Loftus had the mount on Man o' War, and, as on previous occasions, he practically confined his efforts to getting the colt away flying and after that let him run his race pretty much as he pleased, and with the speed he has shown he is capable of.

By Golly Disappoints.

There were ten starters and much difference of opinion regarding those other than the favorite. E. R. Bradley's By Golly, which came from Kentucky with something of a reputation, and which was supposed to be a match for the Eastern pride, was well backed, but proved in the running that he had no such speed as the winner. By Golly was even a disappointment to Western horsemen, who had expected him to give Man o' War a good battle at least.

Man o' War was almost overanxious at the post and several times broke through the barrier. On one occasion he ran a hundred yards before Loftus could pull him up. Both horse and jockey were set for a quick start, and they got it when the barrier was sprung. Loftus rushed his mount out into the lead in the first few strides, with Bonnie Marie and Carmandale close to him. Through the back stretch these three raced well bunched, while the others were some distance back and struggling along in a mass. Bonnie Marie showed fine speed in the early part of the race and gave battle to the named favorite, but by the time she had reached the turn she had been raced into submission. Carmandale had also had all he wanted of such fast going, and both of these dropped back. Man o' War continued on his way, and going around the turn continued to draw away from his competitors.

H. P. Whitney's Upset, which had broke among the last, found his racing legs in the back stretch and when Bonnie Marie and Carmandale dropped back he sailed past them and took after the flying leader. Upset ran a fine race, and turning into the stretch three lengths back of Man o' War he attempted to challenge for first place. It was a game but hopeless effort. Man o' War was running just as fast there as he had in the beginning, and Upset was never within less than three lengths of him until the last few strides, when Loftus saw what an easy victory he was scoring and eased up the colt. Upset gained a few strides through this and finished second a length and a half back.

S. Lewis's Homely, which had been overlooked entirely, came through with a great rush in the stretch and overtook the others, to take third with something to spare from Bonnie Mary. The latter hung on gamely and was good enough at least to defeat the Western crack, By Golly.

The victory of Man o' War was made the more convincing because of the fact that he had been assigned an impost of 130 pounds, but the weight did not seem to bother him in the least. He is a large colt which promises to be a good weight carrier. Bonnie Mary had 127 pounds up, while Carmandale carried 125 and finished third from last.

Milkmaid Wins the Kenner.

The Kenner, for three-year-olds, which was the event next in importance, was won by Commander J. K. L. Ross's Milkmaid, which beat H. C. Hildreth's Cirrus. This race, which had promised to bring out a number of the topliners, was finally run with only three starters. Commander Ross had entered Sir Barton, but this racer was scratched, the Canadian sportsman being content to chance victory with his fleet filly. Frogtown, owned by W. S. Kilmer, was the third starter.

The race turned out to be one of the prettiest of the day, despite the small field, though at all times it was a contest between Milkmaid and Cirrus. The defeat of the latter was charged in some measure to the ride of Jockey Ensor, who replaced Fator on the Hildreth mount for the day. Frogtown was permitted to go into the lead in this mile and three-sixteenths journey and to hold the position until either one of the others was ready to challenge.

Frogtown got some distance in front, and Ensor kept Cirrus close on the heels of Milkmaid. He was still in a good position when the stretch turn was reached. At that point Sande, on the Ross filly, moved along to the lead, with Cirrus close after. Milkmaid bore out slightly at the turn, and Cirrus was carried out several yards, enough to beat him at the finish. However, Ensor who had his choice of going outside or taking the rail, and he chose the former route, and lost what chance he might have had to win. When it came to the final test Cirrus got up to within half a length of Milkmaid, but could gain no more on her. She was badly ridden out, but she lasted to win by a neck.

Surprise by Katie Canal.

One of the best races of the day, so far as the competition was concerned, was the fifth, for three-year-olds and up at a mile. This also provided an upset, as the victory went to J. E. Griffith's Katie Canal, which was a 15 to 1 shot. There was a big disappointment in this event because the favorite, Court Gallant, broke down in the back stretch and had to drop out of the race. This colt went suddenly lame and was prevented from falling by the quick work of Jockey McAtee. Court Gallant was leading at the time, and after the others had passed him he was taken to the side of the track and the jockey returned across the field. Katie Canal came out of the field when the others reached the stretch, all well bunched, and won by three lengths. Manoeuvre took the place from Umbral.

The sixth race, which brought out a field of two-year-olds, went to Ral Parr's Bull's Eyes, which took the bit in his teeth at the start and was never headed. Hidden Ship was second and Roseland third. After the race Max Hirsch bid up the winner, which was claimed by the owner for $2,500.

The steeplechase event of today brought out a number of the aged fencers, and went to Northwood, owned by A. J. Davis. The race was unusually close for a steeplechase, and the horses were well bunched when they came to the last turn. Northwood, which had set all the early pace, dropped back at the last turn only to come forward again in the last hundred yards to win from Crest Hill. Robert Goodfellow took third.

RICH STAKES THIS WEEK AT SARATOGA

Alabama and Saratoga Special Will Draw Pick of the Turf to the Barrier.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, Aug. 2.—The racing season at Saratoga, already launched upon the high road to success with the running of the Saratoga Handicap and the Flash Stakes on the opening day, is living up to the forecast; it will prove the most successful meeting held here in many years. Horsemen are rather justified in referring to it as a peace jubilee of the sport, for with more than 2,000 horses stabled here for the various events, the values of which have been increased in many instances, the sport has been brought back to a real peacetime basis.

If this was not obvious from the quality of the racing itself, it would be manifest by the enthusiasm and the attendance. The quiet and restful little town of Saratoga has come out of its eleven months' of slumber and is once more a hustling centre of activity. The Spa has put itself in gala dress, as it always does for the racing season, and for one month at least it will enjoy its place in the sun.

Saratoga is crowded to the gunwales, as it were. Hotel and boarding house accommodations have become exhausted and those who did not make their reservations well in advance are finding it difficult to find a place to lay a weary head at night.

The first two days of racing here only served as an introduction to the program of events which will be run off during the coming week, and which promise to uncover some potential champions. The card for the next six days includes the $10,000 Alabama for three-year-old fillies, over a distance of a mile and a quarter, to be run on Thursday. This is the richest stake of the week, but of almost equal interest is the Saratoga Special, for two-year-olds, which is the feature for the last day of the week. On Tuesday there will be the Delaware Handicap of $3,500, for three-year-olds and upward at a mile, which will bring out some of the best stake horses. The Albany Handicap of $3,000 will be the feature Wednesday. This is an event for two-year-olds at six furlongs.

So far as the coming week is concerned, the two-year-olds will have the centre of the stage. Interest is already pointing to the Saratoga Special, an event which always attracts the best of the youngsters and which usually does much to determine the best in this division.

The Saratoga Special, which was won last year by R. T. Wilson's Hannibal, will bring the topliners of the two-year-old division to the post. It is probable that there will be a dozen starters, and among these will in all probability be P. A. Clark's Bonnie Mary, winner of two important juvenile stakes this season; H. P. Whitney's Panoply, Sam C. Hildreth's Dominique, and E. R. Bradley's By Golly.

This last named is a colt which showed such promise in Kentucky that many Western horsemen believe he will take the measure of the Glen Riddle Farm's Man o' War. By Golly is by Helmet-Acutissima, and though beaten early in the season in the West, he has been improving with experience and is now regarded as having reached the top of his form.

Commander J. K. L. Ross has a youngster in King Thrush which he regards as the best of the two-year-olds in his stable, and which will have to be taken into account if he starts in the Special. He has been well prepared for this occasion.

It is also possible that W. R. Coe will start his fleet filly, Cinderella, which has not raced in some time, having been among those which were victims of illness early in the season. Cinderella was beaten at Jamaica, and after the race it was discovered that the filly was in no condition to be racing. But before this, Cinderella had showed such speed in early races that she had become regarded as a second Elfin Queen. Mr. Coe has been confident all along that Cinderella would again justify his confidence in her and he has not been willing to admit that there is a better two-year-old filly in the country when Cinderella is at her best.

Among the starters in the $10,000 Alabama, which was won last year by A. L. Aste's Eyelid, will be Commander J. K. L. Ross's Milkmaid, which has been one of the best in her division this year. She was defeated in the Kentucky Oaks by Lillian Shaw in a very close finish when Jockey Sande was set down for attempting to interfere with the winner. But prior to that Milkmaid had run some fine races. R. F. Carman's Ground Swell, H. A. Porter's High Born Lady, Samuel Ross's Ormonda, and W. S. Kilmer's My Friend are other eligibles. It is possible that the Oneck Stable will send Elfin Queen to the post in this event. This black beauty suffered with a skin disease last year while at Saratoga which gave her a severe setback at a time when she was a sensation of the turf. She has raced this season, but did not make the showing expected of her and since early in the season has been absent from the races.

The Delaware Handicap, which will be run on Tuesday, will bring out some high-class stake horses. This event was won last year by W. S. Kilmer's Sun Briar and the son of Sunbridge is again a candidate for the honors. Those which will in all probability offer the contention are King Plaudit, Fairy Wand, Ophelia, Routledge, and Midway. The latter, winner of the Kentucky Handicap, is one of the best racers representing the West at Saratoga.

Sun Briar has been undergoing preparation for a repetition of his success last year. The Kilmer racer was brought out at Empire City but was very he has been at the Spa and has been training nicely. He should be fit now for the events in which he will be a starter.

Sam C. Hildreth's Luculite is eligible for the Delaware and will undoubtedly be the only representative from his stable to start, though Regal Lodge was nominated also. A. K. Macomber's Star Master, and Edward McLean's The Porter may also compete in the test.

Hoofbeats of the Racers.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Aug. 2.—Jockey Earl Sande is back in the saddle for the first time since he received a suspension of sixty days for a foul committed in the running of the Kentucky Oaks at Latonia. On that occasion he had the mount on Milkmaid and tried to grab the bridle of Lillian Shaw, which beat his mount for the purse. Sande celebrated his return with two victories, the first on War Pennant in the opening race and the second on Milkmaid.

The Western jockeys are beginning to make their presence felt at Saratoga. Among the good riders who have come East are C. Robinson, the Howard brothers, and Murray. Robinson and Murray were the best riders in the West this season.

Jockey Willy Knapp had a fall while galloping during the morning and was slightly injured. He expects to be back in the saddle Monday, but was obliged to cancel all his engagements today.

W. F. Polson, who brought out Billy Kelly here last year, entered a filly called War Tax in the last race today, and word at once got around that another great racer was about to be started. War Tax ran nicely and was just nosed out of third place, but disappointed those who thought another Billy Kelly was being uncovered.

There is some doubt whether Sam C. Hildreth will start his Luculite in the Delaware Handicap Tuesday. The big black colt is said to have gone lame in his workouts.

Despite the fact that the track at Saratoga has been softened to some extent, horsemen still claim it is unsatisfactory for horses and that it will result in many horses going lame or breaking down. Already the casualties include Roamer, Court Gallant, and possibly Luculite.

QUEEN SQUARE WINS RACE.

Cox's Horse Takes Goodwood Cup by Two Lengths.

GOODWOOD, England, Aug. 1.—The Goodwood Cup featured the closing of the meeting today and was won by A. W. Cox's Queen Square, ridden by Steve Donoghue. The victor was two lengths ahead of W. Montague's White Heat, with Hulme in the saddle.

L. de Rothschild's Splutter, Flanagan up, was third, three-quarters of a length behind. Only five horses went to the post. The betting was: Queen Square, 7 to 4; White Heat, 100 to 30, and Splutter, 20 to 1. The winner, who was trained by Taylor, was the favorite and led throughout the race.

BENSON'S HORSE IN FIRST.

MINEOLA, L. I., Aug. 2.—But two horses started in the free-for-all pace at the matinée of the Nassau Driving Club this afternoon, but the race was exciting.

The first heat was made in 2:12¾ by Mittie Bedworth, driven by W. J. Benson, with Kentucky Marque, driven by her owner, E. Shoemaker, the runner up. The Speedway star was not up to his usual performance, making a bad break on the back stretch.

Bellfair won from Kelly by inches in the 2:22 trot, both heats being close. The racing was good and a majority of the events won in straight heats.

Dr. Haight Leads Golf Round.

The qualifying round for the Carl Carleton Cup was played yesterday at the Belleclaire Golf and Country Club, and Dr. A. T. Haight was returned leader with a low gross of 91. E. M. Tierney took second place with a 94. The other players to qualify were J. G. Noakes, R. W. Francke, D. W. Hill, E. R. Carroll, L. O. Smith, H. O. Hoffheimer, W. C. Freeman, F. Straight-Miller, G. W. Spaid, F. Wolff, R. A. Dickson, J. F. Walsh, S. L. Newman, and H. Stanley Green.

JUNIOR POLO STARS SHOW GREAT SKILL

Game Has Developed Promising Young Players for International Competition.

Rising stars are twinkling in all parts of the American polo firmament this season. The junior poloist is essentially a home product, for he is hardly known in Great Britain, the only other English-speaking country where polo is a first grade sport, while on the Continent or in India he has never existed, unless in very isolated instances. But in the United States the boys have always been encouraged to take up the game early if they had the inclination and the opportunity.

Among the first junior players to break into the limelight as topnotchers were Kingdon and Jay Gould, the latter now the eminent court tennis player. Not long after their father laid out a polo field at Georgian Court, Lakewood, the two boys, with George Gould as No. 1 and Benjamin Nicoll as back, won the junior championship of the Polo Association. Both the national championships in that year, 1903, were played at the Philadelphia Country Club, Bala, Penn., the field that has been selected for this season's title fixtures in September. For some ten years they have been played at the Point Judith Polo Club, Narragansett Pier, but the Polo Association has decided to change about from year to year hereafter.

When the Lakewood four won the junior the senior was captured by the Country Club of Westchester four, J. M. Waterbury, Jr., Lawrence Waterbury, H. P. Whitney, and John E. Cowdin. The team included the actual pioneers of American junior polo, the Waterburys. They were in the game ten years before the Gould boys and on the team representing the Westchester Polo Club (of Newport) that won the senior championship at Prospect Park, in 1899, the fifth year it was played. Their teammates then were Foxhall P. Keene and John E. Cowdin.

The Waterburys, as thousands will recall who saw the international cup matches at Meadow Brook, were perfect in passing the ball from one to the other. This set of tactics, which included near side cross-cuts under the necks of their mounts, besides near side back-cuts, both useful when the two brothers had to break away from a scrimmage, and the long shots up to near the goal where the other would be awaiting the ball, to shoot it between the posts, were developed and practiced when the two were kid players on the field of the Westchester Country Club.

Gould Boys Daring Riders.

The Gould boys were also masters of passing and mutual aid plays, and, as with the Waterburys, daring and clever riders and hard hitters. The way either Kingdon or Jay would meet at speed a ball coming head on, H. L. Herbert, Chairman of the Polo Association, said in a recent comment, and send it on the fly to the other brother, was, in his opinion, the most wonderful feat he had ever seen. A failure would have been disastrous, and every chance favored a miss, but the boy who rode for the hit always met the oncoming ball squarely and pulled off the stroke as easily as though swinging his mallet at a daisy top.

There have been no championships played in this country since 1916, which heightens the interest in the approaching contests at Bala. The junior title, it is interesting to note, was won then by Meadow Brook third team, F. S. von Stade, Raymond Belmont, Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., and Morgan Belmont, which beat Point Judith, Philip Stevenson, Rodman Wanamaker, A. C. Schwartz, and P. S. P. Randolph, Jr., by 11½ to 2¾. Under the unusual circumstance that the game was started in a downpour, owing to the calling post-haste of the two Belmonts to an officers' training camp at Plattsburg, the game was of a rough and ready character, yet withal fine polo, that it is doubtful that any who saw it will ever forget. Hitchcock and Wanamaker were 17 in that memorable game, but if they play until they are 70, it is doubtful if they will ever ride or hit under worse weather conditions.

Age, of course, does not make the distinction between the junior and senior championships. It is based on playing form, the senior open to all players, but no team may enter for the junior if the aggregate handicap of the four exceeds twenty goals. On this account youthful players always get an opening, however, for the idea is to couple two high and two low handicapped men, so as to form as strong a combination as possible without getting the total over twenty. But both championships are played on flat terms, without any handicap.

One of the early incentives to induce the younger set to place polo in their rosters of sports was a series of cups presented by William A. Hazard, Secretary-Treasurer of the Polo Association, with that aim in view. They were first put up some fifteen years ago, respectively for annual competition between the boys identified with the New York, Philadelphia or Boston groups of country and polo clubs. Each member of the winning team received an individual trophy and the club they hailed from had possession of one of the big cups for the year. Mr. Hazard, after a visit to England about that time, gave a cup under similar conditions to the Country Polo Association of Great Britain, which accepted it and thus gave the first official acknowledgement of junior polo there.

Naturally, in view of the cost of the outfits, the maintenance of the mounts and the need of having the use of a field to play on, polo will always have a limited support from the juvenile public. Those who play do so because they are in the environment. This, rather than any basis for the idea that playing the game is a matter of heredity, accounts for prominence at polo seeming to run in certain families. But when the fathers play, of course it is easy for the sons—or daughters—to get practice early in the strokes and to learn how to ride properly, even if they only begin by giving the ponies their exercising gallops.

Many Juniors Play Game.

Yet there is no lack of boys now busy at polo, for wherever there is a club and a field in these United States the juniors are in the saddle whenever they can obtain a mount, or, if forced to it, many of them get good fun out of a sort of polo played on bicycles. But the rising stars of the game, from whom the international and champion teams of the game must be made up, have long passed these preliminary steps. They have, in most cases, their own strings of mounts, a recognition at their clubs, and a definite rating on the handicap list of the Polo Association.

At old clubs like Meadow Brook, with a large membership, and in the centre of what "real estaters" term a residential villa neighborhood, there are more boy players than at a small club. There the most prominent, and with little doubt the most prominent player of his age in the country, is Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., who has just finished his first year at Harvard after a lapse from his studies and the game that kept him flying in France until his capture, followed by a brave escape from a prison camp in Germany. He is a fine goal man, plays No. 2 for choice, but is good wherever placed, and a most reliable hitter.

Other Meadow Brook juniors are C. L. Appleton, Jr., a three man; Douglas Burden, a boy who played a fine game at Point Judith in 1916 and had the use of H. P. Whitney's mounts in a couple of games; C. V. Whitney, son of the latter, a clever player now rated at two. He is especially apt as a rider, and was in the saddle on Royal Duchess and Corker, the two mounts that carried off the highest honors at the show of the National Polo Pony Society on June 25. Elliott C. Cowdin, of the Rockaway Hunting Club is a two man and very capable.

Among the Philadelphia juniors, although he is now over 21, the highest rated player is P. S. P. Randolph, Jr., a five-goal man, who, with his brother Wister, made the campaign in France. Of the players still well under 20 the best in the Pennsylvania group are Rodman Wanamaker, splendid at all points of the game and now rated at three goals, and Robert Strawbridge, Jr., still at two goals. A 19-year-old Washington boy, Kent Lagare, is very promising, and also the two sons of Walter L. Goodwin, who was one of the pioneers in polo at Hartford and at Yale, Walter L., Jr., and Sage. Both are well grounded in the game and are playing in tournaments this season for the first time.

RUMSON POLO TEAM WINS.

Special to The New York Times.

RUMSON, N. J., Aug. 2.—In a fast galloping game, the Rumson polo four, by superior mallet and team work, defeated the Rumson Robins on the practice field at the Rumson Country Club today before a large gallery of spectators. The final score was 8½ to 2¼ goals.

The hard, long hits by J. Ford Johnson, Jr., and the allround play of J. Berens Waters, who played against his father, G. Jason Waters, featured the interesting contest.

The score and summary:

RUMSON.	RUMSON ROBINS.
1—M. S. Metcalf, Jr.	1—Hugh C. Barrett.
2—Peter Hauck.	2—Leland H. Ross.
3—J. F. Johnson, Jr.	3—Thomas S. Field.
Back—J. B. Waters.	Back—G. J. Waters.

Rumson Robins—Ross, (2,) Field; lost by foul, ½, and ¼ by safety. Total—2¼.

Referee—Colonel Howard S. Borden.

Britton to Fight Griffiths.

Jack Britton, welterweight champion, and Johnny Griffiths of Akron, Ohio, are to clash again. The men have signed articles for a bout to be held at Denver, Colo., Thursday night. The contest will be for twelve rounds, without a decision.

SHARP POLO CLASH WON BY ROCKAWAY

Meadow Brook Four Outridden and Outplayed in Fast Game Played for Charity.

STODDARD IN STAR'S ROLE

Makes Five Goals for Victors, Whose Total Tally Is 8¾ to 3½ for Losers—Goodly Crowd Present.

Charity spurred on the polo mounts yesterday in a fast game at the Meadow Brook Club. Over 3,000 persons watched the sport and applauded the victory of the Rockaway four over the Meadow Brook team, playing without handicaps, by 8¾ to 3½ goals. The net receipts were donated to the Nassau Hospital of Mineola, and, as the field was lined with automobiles at $10 a parking space, a substantial sum was realized.

Among the shining motor cars, a sporting novelty was a break and four-in-hand team with Seward Cary as whip. With the national and club flags slapping in a stiff breeze, a regimental band from Camp Mills playing between the periods, and a contest full of snap, the ensemble was a real polo picnic. It was decidedly a happy afternoon for the Rockaways, who wore red blouses instead of their usual dark blue, and especially for Louis E. Stoddard, who made no less than five goals on his own account, four of them in one period.

Lineup of the Teams.

Taking the positions as named, Rockaway sent in Louis E. Stoddard, Earl W. Hopping, Malcolm Stevenson and J. Cheever Cowdin, while the wearers of the light blue were Thomas Hitchcock, Jr.; J. Watson Webb, Robert E. Strawbridge, Sr., and Devereux Milburn. H. H. Holmes was the efficient referee, while James C. Colley, the Meadow Brook polo manager, was ubiquitous, serving as ticket taker, host, and general master of ceremonies.

Cowdin added to his big string of ponies two purchased from Horace O. Havemeyer in the morning for $4,200, both bays, Lady Buzz and Red, and he loaned mounts to both Hopping and Stevenson. Stoddard had both his imported and American ponies saddled, two of which, Carnation and Monahan, he has recently bought from Horace O. Havemeyer for $3,200. The initial goal was hit by Webb on a first season novice mount he calls Postman, a very handy bay, and all his string were corkers. Milburn's ponies seemed too finely drawn in condition. While both teams were well mounted, Rockaway decidedly "outpointed" Meadow Brook. As a colored chef at the club who had backed the losers cried out, after the game, "Rockaway done chased us with speed."

Rockaway was on the aggressive from the start and had two end outs in the first period, but toward the close Meadow Brook had the ball. Webb made a fine try for goal that was blocked by Cowdin from between the posts, and, to prevent Webb regaining the ball, Stevenson was forced to a safety. No goals were scored.

In the second period, after three minutes and twelve seconds, Webb sent along a ball hit up by Milburn by a straight drive and tallied the first goal for Meadow Brook. Stoddard was penalized for a foul hook on Milburn, leaving Rockaway minus three-quarters at the end of the period and Meadow Brook a goal to the good.

Tide of Game Changes.

In the third period there was further gloom for the Rockawayites, for in the opening scrimmage at the Meadow Brook end, Hopping was punished for a foul cross on Webb, setting the team back to minus a goal and a quarter. Almost immediately the tide changed, for Hopping coaked through a ball sent to him by Stevenson for a goal; after fifty-eight seconds of further play and Webb was penalized for a foul cross, a quarter and Meadow Brook only a half a uarter and Meadow Brook only a half good, a decided change for the better for the Cedarhurst clans.

The third goal of the game was taken by Stoddard in the fourth period, by a shot from quarter-field, two minutes and one second after the throw in. When the ball was put into play again Stevenson stole away with it and by a long offside hit gained another tally for Rockaway in eighteen seconds. There was no more scoring, the situation at half-time being Rockaway, 1¾ goals to Meadow Brook's 0.

The fifth period, despite desperate striving by Meadow Brook and blocking by Rockaway, saw but one goal scored, a long shot at an angle by Stevenson, after one minute and seven seconds.

Stoddard Gets Very Busy.

One of the most remarkable periods ever seen for individual gain without ever sacrificing team work and supporting was the sixth. Twenty-four seconds after the knock in by Milburn that opened the play, Stoddard, who met the ball, scored a goal. Two minutes and nineteen second later, getting the ball by a lofting shot, he sent it right over Milburn's head and scored another. This was merely warming up work, as it seemed, for getting the ball from Holmes' toss in, Stoddard scored his third goal in nineteen seconds. Rockaway then kept the ball in Meadow Brook territory and from a scrimmage Stoddard scored for the fourth time, in fifty-two seconds. No one else did anything in the period as to scoring, but the men were all playing their positions for all they knew.

The score at the opening of the seventh period was 6¾ goals to ½ in favor of Rockaway. Two minutes and forty-eight seconds of hitting and fast riding marked the beginning, when Stevenson sent the ball up for goal by another of his offside shots, but it hit a post and rebounded back on the field. Cowdin was up in time to baby it through, however.

Then Meadow Brook broke its long spell of fruitless driving by making a goal by a neat hit, in one minute and fifty-one seconds. There was no further scoring, but both teams were always trying. Rockaway, unlike teams usually in a big lead, did not play for the sides to gain time. It was evidently a match for blood.

In the eighth period, after two minutes and five seconds, Milburn hit a long goal. Then Hitchcock had two fine openings, but missed on direction each time, but the third time he was not to be denied, and when Webb hit up the ball he placed it between the posts neatly enough. The time was one minute and fifty-six seconds. There was only one other goal scored, made by Hopping for Rockaway, in two minutes and forty-eight seconds.

The summary:

ROCKAWAY.	MEADOW BROOK.
1—L. E. Stoddard.	1—T. Hitchcock, Jr.
2—E. W. Hopping.	2—J. W. Webb.
3—M. Stevenson.	3—R. E. Strawbridge.
Back—J. C. Cowdin.	Back—D. Milburn.

Rockaway—Goals earned, 10; less penalties, 1¼. Total, 8¾.

Individual goals: Rockaway—Stoddard, (5,) Hopping, (2,) Stevenson, (2,) Cowdin. Meadow Brook—Webb, (2,) Milburn, Hitchcock.

Penalties—Fouls against Stoddard, Hopping, and Webb; safety, Stevenson.

Referee—H. H. Holmes.

MANY GOLF CHAMPIONS TO COMPETE THIS WEEK IN VICTORY CUP TOURNAMENT AT SIWANOY

GOLF STARS WILL MEET AT SIWANOY

Travers, Ouimet, and Kirkby Are Among Linksmen Who Will Bid for Victory Cup.

COURSE MAY STUMP THEM

Advantage of Knowing the Ground Will Be with Sawyer, Conley, and Anderson, Home Players.

The national amateur golf championship is out of reach of New Yorkers this year, but metropolitan devotees of the royal and ancient game will have their opportunity to see the élite of the golfing world perform this week at Siwanoy in the play for the Victory Cup, an immense silver trophy that will require the services of a whole committee to lift it into the arms of the winner. It is at present in the custody of the Westchester County Golf Association, under whose auspices the tournament is being held, and was presented, with the other prizes, by Rodman Wanamaker.

Jerry Travers, former national open and four times national amateur champion, has his eye on it, but there is Francis Ouimet to say him nay, and Ouimet is also an ex-open and ex-amateur champion. Oswald Kirkby of Englewood, present metropolitan title holder, is also entered, and the Englewood golfer is going well at this time, which means that former, present, or future title holders must hole every putt and avoid the bunkers if they hope to shake him off before the home hole has been played. Jesse Guilford, the long-driving New Englander, has listened to the silvery persuasion of John Anderson and will toss his hat and driver into the golfing ring at Siwanoy.

In fact, there is almost a plethora of champions in this tournament. Ouimet is present Massachusetts State champion, Kirkby is metropolitan leader, A. L. Walker, who has promised to be among those present, is intercollegiate titleholder; Roger Hovey holds the Connecticut title; G. L. Conley of the home club but recently won the Westchester County championship, and there are enough former champions listed to form a respectable "Who's Who in Golf" catalogue.

Siwanoy Course Difficult.

Siwanoy is a difficult course and a fine test of golf. There are three prominent players who should have quite an advantage over the rest of the field by the fact that they will be playing in their own backyard—Ned Sawyer, G. L. Conley, and John G. Anderson. Of this trio Sawyer and Anderson are hardy campaigners. They have had long experience in many hard fought battles, and are not liable to lightly toss away the advantage of playing on a home course. In addition to this John Anderson seems to be right on top of his game at present, as his work in the international match with the Canadians proved. He is a sticker and a plugger, and generally acknowledges he is beaten just about the time his opponent clicks the winning putt against the back of the cup, but never before.

The greatest interest, however, will probably be centred in Jerry Travers and Francis Ouimet. Travers, playing from Wykagyl now instead of his old home, Upper Montclair, has been quite a puzzle on the links since winning the open championship at Baltusrol in 1915. Most of his play since that time has been in exhibition four ball matches with stellar amateurs and professionals, and the quality of his golf has varied from the brilliant to the unspeakable, for a player of his calibre. But through all the dark days there has lived a hope in the hearts of the golf enthusiasts that some day the one and only "Jerry" would come back to the top of the heap and stay put. All the world loves a good fighter, and by his magnificent finishes in days gone by Travers carved out a niche for himself which will never be forgotten while a sliced shot gets a bunker and a topped ball rolls in a ditch.

Ouimet Idol of Plebeians.

While Travers is the favorite among the denizens of the links, Francis Ouimet is the idol of the proletariat and the man in the street, who rejoiced with exceeding gladness when a 19-year-old American youth stepped to the fore at Brookline in 1913, when all the favorites had failed, and defeated the world-famous Vardon and Ray of England for the national open championship. Men, women, and children who cannot tell a brassie from a sand trap remember Ouimet and his famous victory, and always will. The Boston golfer proved his quality in 1914 by winning the amateur championship at Ekwanok, where he defeated Jerry Travers in the final, 6 and 5. Lately he has been coming to the front in good style, and his play in this tournament will be watched with interest as a guide to his chances for the national amateur championship at Oakmont shortly.

All the leading players will be scrutinized for this same reason. For the past few seasons Oswald Kirkby has been threatening to do great things at the national tournament. He has been getting closer to championship form each time, and it would not be strange if the Englewood golfer picked on this year to get the crowning title. At Siwanoy would be a good place to start. Kirkby was going beautifully at Merion, with all sails set and a good breeze behind, when he ran head on into Gardiner White in the act of producing two of the best rounds played in the whole tournament. The result was a shipwreck for the hopes of the metropolitan champion. White in turn fell a victim to Jesse Guilford. All three are to play at Siwanoy, and at least two of them may gain partial revenge for past favors.

Phil Carter to Play.

Of the younger set, Phil Carter, Reggie Lewis and Bobbie Jones stand out. Jones has been playing brilliantly lately. He led the field at the beginning of the Canadian open championship, finished in a tie for second place, and played well in the international competition at Hamilton. Reggie Lewis has not been seen much lately on the links, but he always has the possibility of a record game tucked away in his bag, and he produces it at odd moments to his own delectation and the mortification of some aspiring champion. Phil Carter is only lately returned from a stay of several years in France, where he was attached to the French Army in the ambulance service. He recently won the Shinnecock tournament, but that is hardly a guide to his form at present, as there was a dearth of high-class competition against him. Four or five years back Carter shot like a meteor across the golf firmament, with one flashing victory after another. Then the mainspring seemed broken, or sand got in the works, for he fell off badly. He is still very young, however, and his play will bear watching.

One or two Canadians may journey down to have a go at the trophy, and an unknown local player may slip through the field and make off with the cup. Such things have been done before in the golf world, but with the high-class field that will tee off over the Mt. Vernon links, it is odds on that laurel will bedeck some brow that has already been decorated on other links with the wreaths of victory in famous tournaments of the past.

MARSTON ONE UP IN EKWANOK FINAL

Baltusrol Man's Plucky Uphill Battle Gains Him the Verdict Over Patten.

MANCHESTER, Vt., Aug. 2.—Maxwell R. Marston of Baltusrol defeated William W. Patten of Schenectady, N. Y., today 1 up in the thirty-six-hole final match for the Isham Cup on the links of the Ekwanok Country Club.

Patten had the lead nearly all day, and was 1 up at the end of the first eighteen. At the fourth hole in the morning Marston was 3 down.

Patten was again 1 up at the turn in the afternoon, but Marston squared the match at the thirtieth. Patten's poor drives at the thirty-third and thirty-fourth cost him the match, although he won back a hole at the thirty-fifth by holing out a long putt. The final hole was halved. Marston had to play the last nine in thirty-six strokes to win.

MORNING.

Marston—Out	5	5	4	4	4	8	7	4	4—40
In	5	2	4	3	4	4	6	5	5—39	—79

The summaries:

Final Round, Thirty-six Holes; Shaw Cup.—M. R. Marston, Baltusrol, beat William W. Patten, Mohawk, 1 up.

Losing Sixteen Division, Thirty-six Holes.—Durham Jones, Braeburn, beat A. M. Kinsley, Oneida, 8 and 8.

Third Sixteen, Eighteen Holes.—William Moffat, Yahnundasis, beat George Morse, Rutland, 5 and 4.

Fourth Sixteen.—C. F. Watson, Jr., Baltusrol, beat Jasper Lynch, Lakewood, 2 and 1.

Fifth Sixteen.—B. W. Godsoe, Woodland, beat C. G. Cumstock, Sleepy Hollow, 2 up.

Sixth Sixteen—H. M. Ridabock, Woodway, beat G. T. Stevens, Mt. Anthony, 2 up.

Net Score Results—George L. Forman, Hartford, 91, 16, 75; E. W. Taylor, Jr., Philadelphia, 90, 14, 76; N. V. Noyes, Oneida, 86, 10, 76; P. C. Emmons, Baltusrol, 89, 12, 78; C. Carrington, Woodland, 91, 14, 78; George N. Collett, Metacomet, 84, 6, 78; W. M. Coxe, Englewood, 85, 6, 79.

WIND MAKES SCORES SOAR.

Clery Wins North Hempstead Golf Title with an 83.

E. D. Clery, Jr., present champion of the North Hempstead Country Club, won the qualifying round of the club championship tournament yesterday with a card of 83.

He played consistent golf, negotiating the first half in 41, and the second leg of the journey in 42. Something was in the wind yesterday, and the North Hempstead players were adding strokes to their scores as if they kept adding machines instead of mashies in their golf bags. Captain John Hoyt, the returned aviator, after gathering a 99 in and out of several bunkers, seemed to believe that flying was easier than golf, and not such a strain on the temper. There were several ties for last place in the club championship flight, and these will be played off.

In the qualifying round for the August trophy, Frank Tasker led the field with a card of 94—20—74. E. D. Clery Jr. was second, 83—8—75. Allen Walker, the left-handed golfer who was expected to be among the leaders, was far, far from the front with a gross of 96.

BARCLAY WINS GOLF FINAL.

He Defeats Meding in July Tourney at Hackensack.

J. C. Barclay won the final round of match play and captured the July tournament of the Hackensack Golf Club yesterday by defeating G. M. Meding 1 up and 1 to play. In the beaten eight division L. W. Pomares won from A. T. Dorsey, 5 and 4.

The qualifying round for the August tournament was also held, W. B. Smith leading the field with a card of 91, 20—71. The other qualifying scores were: A. R. Ramee, 92, 20—72; William Van Buren, 95, 20—75; S. K. Bradfield, Jr., 91, 16—75; J. C. Barclay, 91, 15—76; A. L. Irwin, 103, 26—77; C. C. Smith, 88, 11—77; W. B. Hartshorn, 93, 14—79; H. S. Kennedy, 97, 18—79; A. Morell, 85, 6—79; C. R. Shryer, 107, 26—81; L. W. Pomares, 88, 7—81; W. E. Forster, 106, 22—84; C. D. Zabriskie, 102, 17—85; A. T. Dorsey, 101, 15—86; G. W. Scott, 111, 24—87.

GWATHMEY IS GOLF VICTOR.

With a Gross 73, He Leads Apawamis Medal Play.

In spite of a high wind that made scoring very difficult, Gaines Gwathmey, finalist in the recent Westchester County championship, where he was runner-up to G. L. Conley, led the field yesterday at Apawamis in the eighteen hole medal play handicap, with a gross of 73, and a net score of 69. He was out in 37, and home in 36 with a 7 on the fourteenth hole. Three players tied for second place, H. D. Bulkley, 94—16—78; C. B. Denning, 96—18—78, and E. J. Laidlaw, 91—12—79.

HOST OF GOLFERS ON ELIGIBILITY LIST

Hundreds of Players Whose Rating Entitles Them to a Shot at Championship Named.

This year's eligibility list for the national amateur golf championship which was issued by the U. S. G. A., is all embracing in its scope. Practically every amateur golfer who has the most remote chance of even qualifying among the select thirty-two for the match play rounds has his name on the roster, or if not, it is a mistake easily rectified. In fact, the list contains many names of players who have forsaken championship tournaments these last few decades, and it is understood that when the next list is issued many of the old-time veterans will be weeded out.

All amateurs who have a rating approximating a handicap of 5, based on par, are supposed to be included in this list. It was compiled by taking the lists of nominations from the various sectional golf associations all over the country. In some few cases where outlying clubs were not affiliated with sectional organizations golfers were included upon properly certified scores through the club secretaries.

The name of Francis Ouimet, whose absence from the last eligibility list was the feature, is down in black and white on this one, playing from the Woodland Golf Club. Chick Evans has his name at the top of the list, out of alphabetical order, due to his supreme position for the nonce at the head of amateur golf. With the field that is entered at Oakmont, however, the foundations of his throne seem none too solid. Jerry Travers, Max Marston, Oswald Kirkby, and all the other metropolitan stars are in their proper places, and each one is bent upon succeeding Chick Evans' at the top of the next list.

Six golfers have been added since the large list was put into the hands of the printers. They are James Bush, R. W. Lee, and H. A. Shannon, Scioto Country Club; H. B. Davis and R. M. Round, Edgewood, and James F. Curtis of Piping Rock, whose name was omitted by error.

The list is as follows:

LOSERO TAKES TWO EVENTS.

Principal Honors in Paulist A. C. Meet Fall to Distance Runner.

John Losero, a former New England champion runner, carried off the laurels yesterday in the members' handicap track meet of the Paulist A. C. at Macombs Dam Park. Losero, starting from scratch in both races, won the two-mile run and three-quarter-mile run in keenly fought struggles.

Losero's hardest fight came in the three-quarter-mile race. He took the lead from his handicapped rivals in the stretch in this race, and just managed to show the way to Harold Cunninghame to the worsted by a matter of about one yard. In the two-mile event Losero went into the lead about half a mile from the finish, and in a stiff chase with Joseph Cerina, who had an allowance of 200 yards, annexed the laurels.

The summaries:

100-yard Dash, Handicap—Won by George Benken, (scratch); James Cunningham, (scratch,) second; Herman Hoffman, (6 yards), third; Peter O'Connor, (2 yards), fourth. Time—0:10 1-5.

440-yard Run, Handicap—Won by Harry Cunningham, (5 yards); Edward Rank, (7 yards), second; Edward Twaites, (18 yards), third; Clifford Brundage, (2 yards), fourth. Time—0:53.

Two-mile Run, Handicap—Won by John Losero, (scratch); Joseph Cerino, (200 yards), second; Peter O'Connor, (200 yards), third. Time—10:31.

Three-quarter Mile Run, Handicap—Won by John Losero, (scratch); Harry Cunningham, (scratch,) second; John Hayden, (40 yards), third. Time—3:21.

MANHATTAN AGAIN VICTOR AT CRICKET

Gets Tenth Straight at Expense of Paterson—Columbia Oval Barely Wins.

PATERSON, N. J., Aug. 2.—By defeating Paterson by 74 to 49 here today the Manhattan Cricket Club of Brooklyn scored its tenth successive victory in the Metropolitan District Cricket League, in which it still holds the lead. R. Comacho, B. M. Lauder, A. Smith and J. Freeman all contributed double figures toward the Manhattan total. S. W. Welch, J. Pendlebury and W. Everall were the doubles on the home team. H. A. Meyer and L. R. Miller of the visiting team took the bowling honors with records of 5 wickets for 24 runs and 5 for 21, respectively. S. Welch of Paterson took 5 wickets for 34 runs and A. Collins 4 for 38.

After one of the most exciting matches in the series of the New York and Jersey Cricket Association, the Columbia Oval eleven defeated Bensonhurst by [illegible] runs on totals of 128 to 124 at [illegible] Park, yesterday. E. Carty, 23, was [illegible] score for the winners, but doubles were also contributed by F. Michaelowski, G. Reece, F. J. Johnson, S. Day, [illegible] Gumpher, E. Henshall, and V. Loote. R. Macpherson's 49, not out, was the best effort of the game, and H. Roth scored 33 for Bensonhurst. H. L. Woodruffe added 11. R. Belgrave of Bensonhurst, with a record of six wickets for six runs, had the best bowling average. Michaelowski took six for 71.

Encountering a short-handed team of the Kings County Cricket Club, which was dismissed for ten, the Longfellows of Brooklyn had no difficulty in winning after rolling 119 at the Prospect Park Parade Grounds yesterday in their Metropolitan League fixture. S. B. Lomas, 26, and S. Albinson, 22, were the best scores on the winning team, other doubles being contributed by B. Thomas, B. Albinson, and B. Renshaw.

3-MILE SWIM WON BY MISS BLEIBTRY

Special to The New York Times.

RIVERTON, N. J., Aug. 2.—Miss Ethelda Bleibtry of the Women's Swimming Association of New York, national and metropolitan middle-distance swimming champion, demonstrated that she is a formidable distance swimmer here this afternoon when she captured the three-mile special swim conducted by the Riverton Yacht Club in the Delaware River.

Miss Bleibtry won the race after a display of great endurance. She followed a fast pace cut out by Miss Eleanore Uhl of the Meadowbrook Club, Philadelphia, over the greater part of the distance, and when the final test came, rapidly plowed her way through the rough water of Delaware River to an impressive victory. The young New York star covered the distance in 44 minutes 15 seconds, finishing about seventy-five yards ahead of Miss Uhl.

The victor made her winning effort when about 300 yards away from the end of her journey. Up to this point Miss Uhl, getting away to a good start in a field of thirty entrants, had set the pace. The swim was conducted over a straightaway course from Bridesburg Pier, Philadelphia, to the Riverton Yacht Club pier, on a flood tide, and the pace cut out by Miss Uhl was remarkably fast in view of the choppy condition of the water. This condition, incidentally, affected the work of Miss Uhl, who was thrown out of her course at about the two-mile mark, when she swerved toward the New Jersey shore. Miss Uhl lost considerable distance on her rivals through this accident, for at the time she was leading by a margin of about 150 yards.

Miss Bleibtry, swimming straight and true on her given course, profited through her rival's predicament, but did not overtake Miss Uhl until about 300 yards from the finish. Here there was a short, sharp struggle between the two swimmers, Miss Uhl seeking with all her remaining strength to maintain her position in the van of the swimmers while Miss Bleibtry, with the approach of the end of her journey, exerting every ounce of her reserve power in a final effort to annex victory. The energy of Miss Bleibtry had its reward, for the New York girl soon passed her Quaker City rival, and proceeded thereafter to the finish in front of the field. Gradually Miss Bleibtry opened up a good lead on Miss Uhl, who lost steadily as Miss Bleibtry progressed through the water with her rapid crawl stroke, to an advantage which amounted to about seventy-five yards at the finish.

LENA FIRST IN FEATURE

Leads Three 30-Footers Over 11-Mile Course—Allure and Sirene Are Among the Winners.

Under almost perfect weather conditions the yachting department of the New York Athletic Club held its first annual regatta on Long Island Sound yesterday. A fleet of thirty-seven yachts came to the starting line, off Execution Light, and raced in a glorious breeze from the north by east. Although the breeze was not as strong as it was last Saturday, on the final day of Larchmont week, it had plenty of body, and drove the racing craft around well chosen courses in splendid time.

The advent of the New York Yacht Club into the open regatta game is one of the most important features of the resumption of yachting this Summer. Before the war the club contented itself with giving its annual long distance race to Block Island. These races have become one of the great events of the Summer and the Winged Foot tars hope to make their annual regatta equally as popular each Summer.

Owing to the fact that the New Rochelle Yacht Club was starting its annual "night race" to Stratford Shoal last evening, the New York A. C. committee, made up of Harry Anderson, Chairman; C. E. Lauton, H. M. Williams, and E. H. Tucker, on board E. Eckert's Renoma, decided to give all the classes short courses so that they could take part in the regatta and get to New Rochelle in time to take part in the long-distance contest.

30-Footers in Close Race.

As the wind came, the larger classes were given a course made up of a reach, a run and a beat. Four of the thirty-footers of the New York Yacht Club had a pretty brush over an eleven-mile course. The winner was Ogden Reid's Lena, which defeated D. R. Richardson's Mizpah for the prize by 1 minute and 49 seconds. Lena seems to like rough going, as it is the second straight race for that craft, each time being in fairly heavy weather.

Allure, the property of J. W. and E. P. Alker, had no great difficulty in winning, among the Long Island Sound schooners. William Baldwin's Alicia, the only other craft in the class, was 17 minutes late at the start. The race, therefore, was hardly a contest. Although beaten on actual time, Lady M. won among the 50-foot yawls. On both actual and corrected time Skid won in the first division of the handicap class and in the second division A. R. Black's Sally IX turned the same trick.

Among the Larchmont Inter-Club yachts the winner was Sirene, the property of R. W. Fraser. Mrs. Gade's Windward won among the small yawls. H. T. Hornidge's Mingo was the winner in Class U. South Wind, a Star that has not been doing much racing this Summer, won in that popular division. Other winners included the Glen Cove Jewel Kat, Alice in the Orienta One design class, One Bell and the New Rochelle one design yacht Virginia.

DIONE WINS CLOSE RACE.

Leads Vega Home by Five Seconds in Manhasset Bay Y. C. Race.

PORT WASHINGTON, L. I., Aug. 2.—With a northwest breeze that was undependable at times, seven yachts of the Star class sailed this afternoon in one of the series of races for the championship of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club. A fluery in the Dione, won the race by the tenuous margin of five seconds over R. D'Orsch's Vega, with Gordon Curry's Aquilla only 35 seconds behind the latter.

Casseday Wins on Malba Links.

H. A. Casseday, with a card of 110—39—71, won the handicap on the links of the Malba Field Club yesterday. There were twenty contestants. The putting competition resulted in a tie between G. N. Stanley and J. Kendall, at 17 holes each.

FULL-SAIL WIND FOR RACE.

Elements Favor Yachtsmen in N. Y. C. C. Regatta.

After being inactive for the last fortnight, owing to Larchmont week, the Corinthians of the lower bay gathered off the Atlantic Yacht Club yesterday afternoon and sailed in the annual regatta of the New York Canoe Club. There is a saying among Gravesend Bay sailors that the canoemen always have a good breeze for their annual cups. Yesterday was no exception. The wind was from the northwest by north, and was decidedly the best breeze of the season. It had just enough strength to send the little yachts flying around the courses in true racing form and not enough body to cause even the smaller classes to tie in reefs.

As the wind came, the committee, made up of S. R. Church, Chairman, assisted by Samuel L. Finlay and John R. Brophy, Atlantic Yacht Club, together with Richard Rummell, the official handicapper, was able to pick a course that gave all the craft a splendid windward leg. Not only did they have to beat against the wind but a head tide also added to the sport. It was just such conditions as racing men enjoy, and as a result the regatta was set down as the most successful sailed so far this season on the lower bay.

The course took the craft on a reach on the starboard tack from the starting line off Sea Gate to a mark off Norton's Point. Here the yachts went on the wind for their long beat to Fort Hamilton. A run followed to a mark off Bensonhurst. Here the yachts hauled in their sheets and had another close reach to the finish line.

With the exception of the third division of the handicap class, and the Star boats, the yachts all went twice around the course. The Stars would have made the full course had it not been for an accident to the rigging of Dr. C. L. Atkinson's Murad. Just prior to the start of the class the peak halyard went and down came the mainsail. R. H. Finlay's Meteor, the only other yacht in the division, refused to start without her class competitor. When repairs were made it was so late that the committee decided to send the yachts only once around the course. At the finish Meteor was 2 minutes and 28 seconds ahead of Murad.

Ethel had a sailover in the first division of the handicap class. In the second division I. L. Beebe, Jr.'s, Fantasia was the winner on both actual and corrected time. She won from Sylla by 1 minute and 11 seconds, both actual and corrected time. The victory was won during the second round. At the end of the first round, Sylla was timed at 4:16:08, Fantasia at 4:17:00, and Careless at 4:17:27. They were the three scratch boats of the class.

Although R. Reede's Aleyon led home the yachts of the third division, on corrected time the first prize was won by J. Christiansen's Bob Cat. E. T. Supper's Mouse was the first of the knockabouts home.

YACHTS BEGIN NIGHT RACE.

Fourteen Craft Sail in New Rochelle Y. C. Fixture.

Fourteen yachts, divided into two classes, started in the annual "night race" of the New Rochelle Yacht Club to Stratford Shoals and return last evening. To allow the yachts that took part in the annual regatta of the New York Athletic Club an opportunity to compete, the New Rochelle committee did not send the boats away until 7 P. M. At that hour there was a fairly fresh breeze from the north by east sweeping over Long Island Sound. As the wind came, the craft had a balloon run from the starting line off Echo Bay as the first leg of the race.

Favored by both a strong breeze and a tide that was setting to the eastward, the craft made excellent time. If the wind holds the winner is expected to break the record for the course, as she should be favored by a westerly tide on the leg back home. As the yachts disappeared to the eastward, the leader was Joyant, the property of T. B. McGovern. Close astern came Fred Richards in the New York thirty-footer Adois, and young Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., in his Comet.

New Rochelle Y. C. annual Stratford Shoal and return race. Start, 7 P. M. Course, 55 miles.

Rating Class.—Joyant, T. B. McGovern; Adois, Fred Richards; Aiora, F. W. Belknap; Algol, William Fuller; Moira, Clarkson Cowl; Allure, J. W. and E. P. Alker; Comet, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr.; Vigilance, G. W. Ford; Constance, E. Groth.

Yawl Class.—Fus Follet, O. Karsch; Windward, Fred Gade; Guardia, Commodore C. A. Marsland; Hazel, T. Wondsel, and Columbine, W. H. Bowes.

NAHMA LEADS FISH YACHTS.

Fifteen-Footers Reappear in Seawanhaka Corinthian Regatta.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Aug. 2.—So great has the interest in yacht racing grown among the members of the Seawanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club that the old fifteen-foot class of the organization was revived today and raced along with the newer Fish boats of the organization. It has been a good half dozen years since the fifteen-footers were raced. Although smaller than the Fishes, the two that sailed did well on actual time over the same course as the other yachts.

The wind was from the northwest and of moderate strength when the craft were sent away. The committee picked Course No. 1 for both divisions. The winner among the Fish was Nahma, the property of Ralph Ellis, Commodore of the club. It beat William H. Appleton's Periwinkle by 15 seconds. It was the first race of the third series for the class. Sabrina was the winner among the fifteen-footers.

ROWING HONORS GO TO DULUTH CLUB

Ten Eyck's Proteges Capture Five Events at Worcester—Kelley Wins Single Sculls.

WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 2.—Jim Ten Eyck, Sr., veteran crew coach, sat in a rowboat close by the finish line of the regatta course today and watched with pride as his sturdy oarsmen from the Duluth Boat Club won first honors in the forty-fifth meeting of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen.

The two days of racing were held on Lake Quinsigamond, the water in which Ten Eyck first dipped his blades as an amateur sculler, and the achievements today of his Duluth athletes were cheered by the largest crowd that ever lined the shores which overlook the famous race course.

Duluth won five firsts in the twelve championship events, and this gave them the Julius Barnes Trophy, representative of the club championship for the National Regatta. The Vesper Boat Club of Philadelphia was second and the Metropolitan Rowing Club of New York, third.

The final race was the senior eight-oared championship, with five crews on the mark. As the crews came to the half-mile post, the crowd at Regatta Point began to yell with such enthusiasm that the thousands at the finish knew a real battle was in progress. The light blue jerseys of the Duluth intermediate and senior crews appeared off the point first, with the oarsmen working in perfect unison and responding to a high stroke.

The intermediates set a terrific pace as they approached the finish, and the seniors fell behind and lost the race by more than a length.

Vesper's strength was in the two strong singles scullers, John B. Kelly and Paul Costello. Kelly attained his ambition to win the American sculling championship, when he led his club-mate, Costello, home in the championship event.

The senior single sculls championship was a pretty race up to the three-quarter mark, when Kelly showed his prowess and pulled to the tape with plenty of open water to spare. This is the first time that the American sculling title has gone to a Philadelphia oarsman, and the first time in nine years than a Canadian oarsman has not taken the honors.

New York oarsmen forged to the front in today's program by their splendid showing in three events. The Union Boat Club of New York, after a hard tussle all through, won the special four-oared big race for service men by a big spurt in the last quarter-mile. Following close upon this, the New York Athletic Club received a rousing ovation when it finished ahead of the Duluth club in the senior quadruple sculls. Duluth had been picked as an easy winner as the crews went to the mark. The New York A. C. crew was fighting from the start and pulled in three lengths ahead of Ten Eyck's scullers.

New York won another race in the special single sculls for service men, when Henry Heller won handily, having a lead of four lengths at the finish. The race was protested by Walter Hoover of Duluth, but the officials ruled that the Major Gen. O'Ryan Trophy should go to Heller.

The Riverside Boat Club of Cambridge, Mass., sprang a big surprise when it gave the Metropolitan Club of New York a setback in the senior doubles. Duluth was entered in this event, but dropped out.

Because of protests that there was crowding in the special single sculls race for men who have been in service, the judges ordered that it be rowed over, but the oarsmen had left the course and the event was scratched.

The Duluth crew won the event for junior eights easily.

HANSEN SWIMS TO VICTORY.

Aided by Heavy Handicap in Close Finish of N. Y. A. C. 200-Yard Race.

A handicap of 1 minute 10 seconds yesterday aided L. Hansen to win the 200-yard handicap swim conducted as part of the program of water sports held by the New York A. C. off the club's grounds at Travers Island. Hansen, calling on all his strength in the final stages of the swim, touched off victorious by a margin of about two yards over Clarence Ross, the young New York A. C. star, who started with an allowance of fifteen seconds. Henry Giebel, allotted eighteen seconds, finished third. The time for the race was 3 minutes 22 seconds.

Hansen's liberal allowance kept him in front over the entire distance, although he was hard pressed as the race neared completion. Ross, with a powerful crawl, strove hard to overtake his rival, but the allowance proved too great. Near the finish Hansen appeared to weaken, and Ross gained steadily, but the former recovered and continued in the lead to the end.

The summaries:

50-Yard Swim, Handicap.—Won by Elmer Handscomb, West Side Y. M. C. A., (16 seconds;) 2, Lloyd Rodgers, New York A. C. (4 seconds,) second; S. J. Cantor, unattached, (5 seconds,) third. Time—0:31.

200-Yard Swim, Handicap.—Won by L. Hansen, unattached, (70 seconds;) 2, Clarence Ross, New York A. C., (15 seconds,) second; Henry Giebel, New York A. C., (18 seconds,) third. Time—3:22.

Fancy Diving Contest, Handicap.—Won by Thomas McKee, New York A. C., (16 points,) with 89 points; Fred Spenberg, unattached, (5 points,) 86.5 points, second; H. Carney, unattached, (20 points,) 84.5 points, third.

LILLIAN T. A WINNER.

Makes Fast Time in Three Straight Heats at Columbus.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Aug. 2.—It took thirteen heats in the final day's card of the midsummer Grand Circuit meeting here today to decide the three-race program. The 2:03 pace alone was finished on schedule when Lillian T. paced ahead of a big field of fast performers in every mile.

The 2:16 trot was won by L. H. O., with Alacer B. the challenger. He won the second heat in a close finish. L. E. O. taking the three others. Anna Maloney, the favorite, was distanced in the first mile.

The 2:14 trot was a long-drawn-out affair, Tommy Direct winning after a six-heat battle. When Luana slipped through and beat Ramco the second mile, one of the longest prices of the meeting was paid. A $5 ticket to win was worth $861, as only two were out. Luana also paid $91.75 to place this heat.

Roxanna Moore, the original favorite, went down to defeat along with all of the other favorites of the day. In the final heat judges put up Shank behind Luana, but she finished in the rack. Un was first choice to win the 2:03 pace. He was in poor form, however, and at the end of the second heat was drawn on account of lameness. Lillian T., in winning the first heat in 2:09¼, paced the second fastest mile of the meeting and lowered her own record of several years standing by a half second. Peter Nash won second money, and Baron Chasn third.

SWIMS TO DUAL VICTORY.

Mildred O'Connell Captures Two Events in Bayside Aquatics.

Miss Mildred O'Connell covered herself with aquatic glory at the annual water sports carnival of the Bayside Yacht Club, conducted yesterday. Miss O'Connell captured two of the events held for women swimmers, winning the diving contest with 14 points and finishing first in the fifty-yard swim for women. Miss O'Connell's time for the latter event was 42 seconds, three seconds faster than that of her nearest rival, Miss Virginia Mowbray.

The Mason family was well represented in the list of victors, two members of the household accounting for first places. Miss Pauline Mason captured the girls' fifty-yard swim in 44 seconds after a close struggle with Miss Mary Fitzpatrick. In the fifty-yard swim for boys little Norris Mason swam to victory in similar time to that of his sister for the distance.

The events were the most successful ever conducted by the Bayside Yacht Club and attracted a record crowd. The club's accommodations were taxed to capacity, and off shore a great fleet of yachts clustered about the scene of the competitions.

The summaries:

Fifty-Yard Swim for Men.—Won by Herbert Liedholm; Anthony Mowbray, second. Time—0:38.

Fifty-Yard Swim for Girls.—Won by Miss Pauline Mason; Miss Mary Fitzpatrick, second. Time—0:44.

Fifty-Yard Swim for Women.—Won by Miss Mildred O'Connell; Miss Virginia Mowbray, second. Time—0:42.

Fancy Diving Contest for Women.—Won by Miss Mildred O'Connell with 14 points; Miss Ora Lee Scott, with 11 points, second.

Greased Pole Walk.—Won by Thomas Gladding, Clifton Willard, second.

Mixed Canoe Race, distance one-quarter mile).—Won by Miss Virginia Mowbray and Norman Donnelly, Miss Agnes Nesbitt and Jerome Atkinson, second. Time—2:08.

Tub Race for Boys.—Won by Busty Rock, Arthur Knapp, Jr., second.

Canoe Tilting Contest.—Resulted in a deadlock between Atkinson brothers and Smith and Camp.

Plank Fools Sambro Quakers.

Philadelphia baseball fans had visions of a return of Eddie Plank recently. The former Athletics pitching star was on a visit to the Quaker City in connection with his automobile business and sauntered out to Shibe Park, where he donned a uniform and indulged in some practice with the team. His identity soon became known, and fingers were pointed promiscuously at the former star. Plank, however, was on the scene just to test the strength of his once strong arm, and his interest ended there.

Final Tennis Match Today.

The final match in the University Heights Tennis Club's doubles tournament will be decided this afternoon. The contending combinations will be Elliott Binzen and Embree Henderson and Allen Behr and Vincent Richards. The match is scheduled to start at 2 o'clock.

SOCIETIES ORGANIZE FOR FRENCH RELIEF

Casenave Announces Federation of All American Agencies for After-War Work.

MYRON T. HERRICK ITS HEAD

Purpose Is to Co-ordinate Labor and Prevent Waste of Effort.

M. Casenave, the French High Commissioner to the United States, announced yesterday that various organizations which have been engaged in activities for the relief of suffering in France have formed an organization, to be known as the Federation of American Agencies for Relief in France. The federation has the official approval of the French Government, and the Chairman is Myron T. Herrick, the former American Ambassador to France.

The announcement issued in the name of M. Casenave, who is the Director General of the various French services in this country, says the federation is considered to be "one of the most important after-the-war organizations in which the United States and France are interested."

"During the war," says the statement, "there were many Franco-American war relief organizations which accomplished no end of good work and relieved thousands of suffering people in the devastated regions. With so many organizations there was naturally some duplication of effort. With the signing of the treaty it became apparent to the French Government that economy could be obtained by establishing in America a federation of the various organizations concerned with relief activities, to act as a central committee without affecting the independent existence of the member organizations.

A number of prominent Americans were asked to be directors, and among the officers of the corporation are Myron T. Herrick of Ohio, Chairman; Paul D. Cravath, Treasurer, and John Moffat, C. B. E., Vice Chairman. M. Casenave and M. Mazot, the General Secretary of the French Services, are the representatives of the French Government on the Federation.

The Rockefeller Foundation, the National Allied Relief Committee, Inc., the French Heroes Lafayette Memorial Fund, Inc., the French Tubercular Children's Fund, the American Committee for Devastated France, and the Children of the Frontier are among the many important organizations included in the federation.

Will Co-ordinate Work.

The federation will make a careful study of the relief requirements in France needing American support. It will assist in co-ordinating the efforts of member organizations, and to aid the member organizations in simplifying administrative methods. The federation will have its headquarters in New York City, at 3 West Forty-fifth Street, and a branch or branches will be established in France to facilitate receiving, administering and distributing funds and supplies. Funds will be raised through voluntary contributions.

In the future when a person in this country makes a donation to a French charity, this person may be assured, if the charity is a member of the federation, that the sum will be used legitimately. Careful, systematic auditing of all the member organizations will be made at regular intervals.

"At the request of the French Mission John Moffat will sail for Europe in September to assist in organizing the federation in France. The federation was originally the plan, to a large extent, of M. Edouard de Billy of the French High Commission, who was killed in an accident some days ago. President Poincaré a few days ago cabled to the French High Commission in New York as follows:

I wish to express to all the American societies who are helping France the deepest gratitude of the unfortunate families who have been the victims of an unmerciful war, and who have already been most efficiently helped in their affliction. Long years will go by before the regions so cruelly laid waste by the enemy can possibly show the appearance and life which formerly distinguished them; yet, while gazing on the ruins, these martyred people feel great consolation and hope in the Franco-American brotherhood; they feel that they have won the hearts of the United States by their sufferings for the cause of liberty and right, and they realize that all this misery will not have been suffered in vain, for liberty is now safe and right is the conqueror.

Foch Sends Message of Thanks.

"On July 4 last Marshal Foch, Commander in Chief of the French armies, cabled the federation officials as follows:

For more than four years war has brought the most frightful devastation upon a large portion of France. In spite of the distance help has been poured out for the generous assistance of the many unfortunates by the American societies that have been organized to assist France. My heart is touched and I wish to express my very deepest gratitude.

"M. Clemenceau, the French Premier, also cabled:

I have learned with the greatest interest of the creation in the United States of a federation of American agencies concerned in relief work for France. I cannot sufficiently repeat how priceless such an initiative is for the French Government. I am personally grateful to all those who are bringing their help for the reconstitution of the devastated regions. These persons give thereby a fresh proof of America's affection for France, and they increase the debt of gratitude which we owe to our American friends. By this federation these societies increase their powers of action and their credit with the American people.

"Minister of Foreign Affairs Stephen Pichon on July 14 cabled:

On the occasion of the glorious celebration of the 4th and 14th of July, I wish to express the most lively thanks of the French Government for the generous and efficient help given to all the victims of the war by the American societies organized for that purpose.

"M. André Tardieu, French High Commissioner in the United States, cabled as follows:

With the deepest feelings, I wish to take a share in the thanks which the President of the Republic has sent to the societies concerned with the relief activities in France, for the very eminent services which have been rendered by these organizations. They have shown what may be done by American good-will in the unfortunate regions which have been laid waste by the enemy. What remains to be done is an immense task, and I cannot sufficiently repeat that it is beyond all things desirable that the relief work undertaken by America shall be carried on, and, if possible, even extended. All those who have helped to bring relief to the miseries of our people will share in our deep gratitude.

"The general plan of the federation is to do away with promiscuous soliciting of funds and collecting donations in an unsystematic manner. It is planned to raise sufficient money for all French charitable organizations by conducting a drive at a favorable time of the year which will not conflict with the drives of the American war relief organizations."

Schumann-Heink Sails for Germany

Mme. Schumann-Heink sailed yesterday on the Holland-America liner Rotterdam to bring back to the United States her two small grandchildren, the children of her son George, an officer in the German navy, who was killed when a U-boat struck a mine in the Mediterranean. Her three other sons fought in the service of the United States.

ENGAGEMENTS.

George Kuhn Clarke of Cambridge, Mass., announces the engagement of his daughter, Miss Eleanor Clarke, to Henry Reed Bowser of Cambridge, son of the Rev. and Mrs. Alexander T. Bowser. Miss Clarke, who is known in society here, is the only great-grandchild of the late George H. Kuhn, one of the founders of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. Her mother died last January. Mr. Bowser is a graduate of Harvard, and was instructor for a year at Brown University. He served during the war as a First Lieutenant in the air service, and recently received his discharge.

MISS ANN ORR MARRIES.

Musical Actress Weds Ex-State Senator McNeil of Connecticut.

Miss Ann Orr, of musical comedy fame, daughter of Mrs. R. M. Orr, was married to former State Senator Archibald McNeil, Jr., of Connecticut, yesterday at noon, at the Church of the Transfiguration, in the presence of a small group of relatives and intimate friends of the bridal pair. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the Ritz-Carlton.

After the breakfast the bride left to fill her matinee engagement at the Globe Theatre, where she is co-star of "She's a Good Fellow." She will end her theatrical career in a few days, and will retire to private life. After a trip to the White Mountains the couple will stay a while at Watch Hill, where Mr. McNeil has a Summer home.

Mrs. McNeil has made her greatest success in "Very Good Eddie," "Leave It to Jane," and the present musical comedy in which she has been appearing. During the war she was active in Liberty Loan drives.

Mr. McNeil is widely known in political circles in New England. He recently disposed of his interests in three newspapers of Bridgeport, Conn., and is now a member of the firm of Archibald McNeil & Sons Company, coal dealers, at 1 Broadway. During the war he served as a lieutenant in the navy.

Miss Kirkham Weds Major Owen.

The marriage is announced of Miss Ida Gulon Kirkham, a daughter of Mrs. Ida B. E. Kirkham of this city, and Major David H. Owen, United States Marine Corps, who arrived recently on the Arizona, which took place Thursday in the Chapel of the Intercession, 155th Street and Broadway, the Rev. J. F. Van Duyne officiating. Miss Marguerite Kenny was the maid of honor and Dr. Frederick Westmoreland, a cousin of the bridegroom, was his best man. A luncheon followed at the Pennsylvania, and Major Owen and his bride left for St. Matthews, S. C., to spend their honeymoon.

Betrothed to Lieut. Com. Mills.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Wilcox, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wilcox of Austin, Texas, to Lieut. Commander Schuyler Mills, a son of Mrs. M. Schuyler Mills of Pelham Manor, in command of submarine O-2, and who is stationed at New London, Conn. He went over with a fleet of submarines and did a year's patrol duty along the Irish coast. The wedding is to take place in October.

The marriage of Nate Salsbury of Chicago, who is with the Marshall Field Company of that city, and Miss Mary Schloss, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Schloss of 156 West Seventy-fifth Street, this city, was celebrated yesterday afternoon at the Schloss residence by the Rev. Dr. Mussey of the Ethical Culture Society. The bride was attended by her sister-in-law, Mrs. William H. Schloss, and Captain Milton Salsbury was his brother's best man.

HUNDREDS VIEW BODY OF O. HAMMERSTEIN

The funeral of Oscar Hammerstein will be held at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning at Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street. The Rev. Dr. Silverman is expected to return to town in time to preach the funeral oration. Interment will be at Woodlawn.

The honorary pallbearers will be Lee Shubert, J. J. Shubert, Abraham L. Erlanger, Marc Klaw, David Belasco, George M. Cohan, Al Woods, William A. Brady, Morris Gest, Percy G. Williams, Lyle D. Andrews, and Henry Rosenberg.

Several hundred persons, many of them among the most prominent in the theatrical and operatic worlds, journeyed yesterday to Campbell's Funeral Church at Broadway and Sixty-sixth Street, to view the body of the great impresario. It will continue to lie in state and be open to public view until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Telegrams of condolence and floral tributes were received from all parts of the United States. A death mask was taken yesterday afternoon at the request of the family. Arthur Hammerstein announced that the funeral would be a public one and that all would be admitted to Temple Emanu-El without distinction.

NO TRACE OF WENTZ BABY.

Witnesses Think They Saw Kidnapper on Third Avenue, but Lost Her.

After a continuous search of four days by the entire detective force of the Bronx, operating under Captain Andrew Wines, no clue has yet been found by which they can trace the whereabouts of Arthur Phillips Wentz, the seven-weeks-old son of Mrs. Elsie Wentz, who disappeared Tuesday afternoon, it was made known yesterday. The baby was taken from his carriage in front of Blumstein's department store at 150th Street and Third Avenue Tuesday afternoon, when the mother was inside the store shopping.

Two young men visited the Morrisania Police Station Friday afternoon and told the detectives that they had seen a strange woman, apparently excited, and carrying a baby in her arms, the afternoon that the Wentz child was lost. The woman, they said, walked north on Third Avenue, entered a five-and-ten-cent store, remained there a few minutes and then walked down to 159th Street and Bergen Avenue, where they lost trace of her in a crowd. They decided to call at the police station and give their information, they said, after they had read newspaper accounts of the disappearance of the Wentz baby.

GABRIEL BROTHERS TO WED.

Arthur R. to Marry Miss Amy Israel; Bertram A. Miss F. H. Fink.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Israel of 749 West End Avenue announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Amy Israel, to Arthur R. Gabriel, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Gabriel of the Hotel Willard, 254 West Seventy-sixth Street.

Simultaneously with this announcement the betrothal is made known of Mr. Gabriel's brother, Bertram A. Gabriel, to Miss Florence H. Fink, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Fink of the St. Urban, 285 Central Park West, who are making the formal announcement.

The two young men are brothers of Gilbert A. Gabriel, music critic for The New York Evening Sun. The weddings are to take place early in the Autumn.

REV. DR. J. G. BACCHUS DEAD

Rector Emeritus of Church of Incarnation, Brooklyn, Stricken Suddenly

The Rev. Dr. John G. Bacchus, rector emeritus of the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, with which he had been connected for forty-six years, died at Sag Harbor, L. I., on Friday. He was on his way to visit his daughter in Westhampton Beach when he was stricken at Sag Harbor.

Dr. Bacchus was born in Kent County, Md., and after a short period in commercial business he took a course at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, and completed his theological studies at the Episcopal seminary in Cambridge, Mass., from which he graduated in 1873. In the same year he went to Brooklyn and became a deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration and in 1874 he was made rector. The name of the church was later changed to the Church of the Incarnation and Dr. Bacchus continued as rector until 1914, when he was made rector emeritus, being succeeded by the Rev. A. W. E. Carrington.

Dr. Bacchus was also honorary canon of the Garden City Cathedral and was three times a deputy to the General Convention of his church. He was a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Long Island, a life member of the Historical Society of Long Island, and a member of the St. Nicholas, New York Clerical and University Clubs.

John Ennis.

John Ennis, who served as Fire Commissioner of the old City of Brooklyn under the administrations of Mayors Whitney, Chapin and Boody, died yesterday in his apartment in the Hotel Chatlaine, Brooklyn. He was in his eighty-first year. Born in County Westmeath, Ireland, he came to this country in his youth and settled in the Fifteenth Ward, in the Eastern District of Brooklyn, in which section he became active in Democratic politics and was long a member of the Democratic General Committee from that ward. He was appointed Fire Commissioner in 1886. Mr. Ennis was one of the oldest members of the old David B. Hill Club, a charter member of the Bushwick Loan and Building Association and standard bearer of the John Ennis Democratic Club.

AIM TO NATURALIZE ALIENS IN THE ARMY

Home Service Section of Red Cross Takes Up Americanization Among Soldiers.

A MESSAGE FROM FOCH

Marshal Thanks Lafayette Fund for Gift to Aid Widows of French Fighters.

Naturalization of noncitizen soldiers of the United States Army is being promoted by the Home Service Section of the New York County Chapter of the American Red Cross. This was announced yesterday by Mrs. John M. Glenn, the Chairman of the New York County organization. The principal effort is being made before the men are actually discharged from the service, but the Home Service visitors have been instructed to pursue the work in the homes of the men after they have returned.

A bulletin issued by Mrs. Glenn on this subject of Americanization says that it has been brought to the attention of the War Department that many alien soldiers who are willing to become naturalized have not been afforded the proper opportunity. The bulletin continues:

"In many instances, these soldiers are being advised that to be naturalized in the service means considerable delay in being discharged; that naturalization can be accomplished much more easily after they have been discharged, when all that is necessary to obtain immediate naturalization is to present their honorable discharge certificate to the proper naturalization officer.

"Such information is erroneous. The naturalization of a discharged soldier means the payment of a fee of $4 and the necessity of securing a certificate of arrival, when such arrival occurred after June 29, 1906, as well as the delay involved in securing a hearing on their petitions for naturalization.

"Department, post, camp, and station commanders will immediately take such steps as may be necessary to insure that the officers of their commands are familiar with the provisions of General Orders No. 146, War Department, 1918, and that alien soldiers who are candidates for naturalization are afforded an opportunity of securing their citizenship certificates prior to their discharge from the service."

Message from Marshal Foch.

The following message has been received from Marshal Foch by John Moffat, Executive Chairman of the French Heroes' Lafayette Memorial Fund, Inc.

Allow me to offer you my very best thanks for the splendid gift of 10,000 francs that you were kind enough to send me for the Reunion Amicale, destined to bring together and to assist the widows of officers. In the name of this organization, and in my own name, I beg you to accept deepest gratitude and to transmit the same to the Executive Committee of the French Heroes Lafayette Memorial Fund, Inc.

Conditions in Italy.

With the factories unable to open because of the extreme shortage of coal the economic conditions in Italy today are perhaps worse than at any time during the war, according to a cablegram received last week by the American Free Milk and Relief for Italy, Inc., of which Mrs. John A. Drake is President. So grave is the situation in fact that Henry M. Rae, member of the Rome Executive Committee of the organization, is now on his way to New York to give first-hand information of the situation as an aid in an extensive drive for more funds to be launched upon his arrival Aug. 6.

"More than 2,500,000 soldiers of the Italian army have been demobilized, and these have been added to the other millions of idle men who are unable to find employment," Mr. Rae cabled before sailing. "With the exception of those who are farmers these men cannot hope to find employment until the country's industries are again started, and they cannot be started without coal. Meanwhile prices have mounted so tremendously that only the wealthy can afford the mere necessities. The children of the poor are actually starving, and under-nourishment of the adult population has resulted in an alarming increase in the number of babies of normal parents being born blind. Expert investigation has shown that the poor nourishment of the mothers is the direct cause of this terrible affliction, which can be stopped only by bringing proper food into the country. At present it seems that America is the only hope for these poor people."

Sufferings in Lithuania.

The Central Committee for the Relief of Jews Suffering Through the War, 51 Chambers Street, in a statement issued yesterday says that $30,000,000 will be required for relief work in Europe before the end of the present year. In the course of an appeal for relief for the sufferers in Lithuania the committee says:

Our Commissioners, just returned from Poland and Lithuania, reported that in Lemberg bread costs 112 times its pre-war price. Eggs cost 90 times as much as before; meat, scarcely to be had, 450 times its normal cost, while rye flour, 70 times as much; potatoes, 2,000 times, and kascha, 100 times the amount it could be had for five years ago. Fresh milk cannot be had at all in any of the cities nearby. This is only a table of food costs, and nothing more, but it does suggest very vividly and plainly, starvation, misery, and the loss through death of practically half of the former Jewish population throughout ever so many places, with a slow but sure death of those struggling on, unless the helping hand comes to them and in time from America.

RAILROADS REPORT UPTURN IN EARNINGS

Figures for First Half-Year of 1919 a Marked Improvement Over Preceding Months.

BEGAN TO SHOW IN JUNE

Increase Not Enough to Offset Huge Deficit Piled Up Against Administration.

Final reports of the railroads to the Interstate Commerce Commission for earnings in June and the first six months of 1919 show a considerable improvement over preceding months. The upturn began to show in June, when there were fewer deficits reported in net from operations than for many months. There was big improvement in the net earnings of carriers during the six months.

The following tables show the earnings as reported to the commission by twenty-three of the important roads:

crops, despite measures suggested to hold back the crops to obtain a more even distribution.

Notwithstanding this, the carriers do not expect to be able to earn enough in the latter half of the year to offset the huge deficit which piled up against the Railroad Administration in the first six months. Even if freight rates are increased substantially it is not generally believed the advances will more than meet increased payrolls.

One question surrounding the return of the roads to private operation at the end of the year is the settlement of the equipment problem. The acceptance by the Association of Railway Executives of the plan prepared by bankers to create a national equipment trust to finance the motive and rolling stock ordered by William G. McAdoo, the ex-Director General of Railroads, has been interpreted as a good omen. At the same time, it is remembered that before the terms of such a trust can be decided upon many important questions must be settled between the corporate managers and the Railroad Administration.

Another question receiving close attention by the corporate managers is that of deferred maintenance. This item has been neglected by the Administration, and corporate managers are holding off in the hope that the Director General will live up to the promise of the President when the properties were taken over that they would be returned in as good condition as they then were.

In some instances all the replacements necessary to return the properties to the same relative condition they were in at the end of 1917 will be physically impossible. At the same time, corporate officers are willing to wait even longer in the hope that the Administration finally will admit the present condition of the lines and will promise to put in the proper amount of replacements, even after the period of Government control is ended.

While the managers of the properties which have deteriorated most say they are willing to wait for such action, it is understood that, if no such provision is made, suits against the Railroad Administration for failure to carry out its contract will be filed amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

It is generally acknowledged throughout the railroad world that there should be a steady improvement in coming months, which should reach its peak at about the climax of the crop movement. It has been predicted several times recently that there will be a shortage of rolling stock to move the

JULY FINANCING NEAR HIGH RECORD

Almost $2,000,000,000 of New Securities Absorbed in America Since Jan. 1.

Figures now available indicate that American industrial and railroad financing in July was approximately $371,000,000, the heaviest for one month in many years, and bankers report the demand for money keeping up. Since Jan. 1 the aggregate new financing here has been about $1,534,000,000, compared with $855,000,000 in the same 1918 period, and while most of the new offerings have been readily absorbed, there is growing uncertainty as to how near the investment market has approached the saturation point.

At the same time foreign countries have obtained $300,000,000 in loans, which increased the new financing since Jan. 1 to nearly $2,000,000,000. The rush to issue new securities has been attributed to the curtailing of such operations during the war, when the Capital Issues Committee served to check widespread flotation of new securities.

Many of the railroad and industrial corporations which could not find accommodations last year were forced to extend maturing obligations, and the refinancing of these items has borne a large part in swelling the total of new capital issues in the first seven months of the current year.

The following tables, prepared by The Journal of Commerce, show the divisions of the new securities put out in July and in the seven months ended with July, in comparison with the issues in the corresponding 1918 periods:

industrial concerns to individual bankers, houses of issue, and various syndicates, the latter have found little difficulty in disposing of them. The various Liberty Bond issues during and immediately following the war, with the attendant high speed, intensive advertising and solicitation of subscriptions, and along with the beginning of the general thrift campaign, and the sale of savings stamps and thrift certificates, educated the American public, or at least a large part of it, to the legitimate profits to be gained from high class investments.

The increase of wages as the result of the war, and the expansion of the national per capita wealth through the favorable trade balance piled up in the last three years, provided the money for investment by those who never before had put their funds into anything but a bank, and the new era of American financing was on. Out of this grew the fever of speculation which has swept over the country in the past seven months, and has resulted in a record-breaking number of successive million share days on the New York Stock Exchange, and a general advance in security values of amazing proportions.

Uncertainties have begun to develop, however, which bid fair to check this wave of stock gambling. The conservative bankers of the country realize that if our position is to be maintained in world trade an organization of national scope is vital to meet the requirements of Europe and the other countries dependent upon us to a large extent for the raw materials necessary for their rehabilitation. The foreign exchange situation has already had its effect, and the belief is general that measures must be adopted without further loss of valuable time which will enable the foreign buyer to come into our markets and purchase goods on a basis more fair than is now possible.

That some such national organization—national in size, but not necessarily Governmental—will soon be created is the hope of a majority of constructive leaders. When it is created there are indications that it will take the form of a huge investment trust corporation, which will accept foreign securities and issue its own securities against them. And when such offerings are made it is generally expected that the American investors will respond with ample subscriptions.

But in the meantime the investment market is feeling the uncertainties of the situation, and, while bankers say they see no sharp check of capital offerings, they do say that with general conditions remaining as they now are the general investment market will go stale. The appetite is still reported strong, but what it will be in a few weeks no banker will prophesy.

As near an estimate as can be made from the returns now available as to the proportion of bonds, notes, and stocks involved in the new financing operations since the first of the year, is contained in the following table:

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—North Butte has increased its daily ore production to more than 88 cars of 700 tons, as compared with 450 tons a month ago.

Winona is reopening with a force of 200 men.

The June output of Granby Consolidated was 2,637,184 pounds of copper, against 1,848,803 pounds in May and 3,438,521 pounds a year ago.

The Chile Copper Company in June produced 5,003,430 pounds of copper, compared with 5,036,000 pounds in May and 9,290,000 pounds in June, 1918.

Orders Bridge Built Over Tracks.

The Public Service Commission, in an order issued yesterday, directed the Long Island Railroad Company to build an overhead foot bridge across the tracks at Card Place, Elmhurst. The order provides that the bridge shall be sixteen and a half feet above the tracks.

LESS WAR PAPER NOW IN RESERVE BANKS

Decline of $3,000,000 in These Holdings Reported for the Week.

FEDERAL FUNDS WITHDRAWN

$48,000,000 Taken Out of Banks—Gold Reserves Show Decline of $6,700,000.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Reduction by about $48,000,000 in the Government deposit account, together with moderate liquidation of discounts and acceptances, is indicated in the Federal Reserve Board's weekly bank statement issued as at the close of business on Aug. 1.

Gold reserves show a further decline of $6,700,000, larger withdrawals of gold for export having been offset in part through gold deposits by the Treasury. $3,600,000, other discounts a decline of $3,000,000 other discounts a decline of $16,000,000, and acceptances a decline of $800,000. War paper holdings of the Chicago, St. Louis, and Minneapolis banks are inclusive of $99,300,000 discounted for other banks, as against $84,900,000 shown the week before, while acceptances on hand at the Cleveland and San Francisco banks include $47,300,000, as against $48,600,000 of acceptances acquired from other banks.

Treasury certificates, largely to secure Federal Reserve bank note circulation, went up about $6,000,000, largely at the New York and Chicago banks. This increase goes hand in hand with an increase of $7,400,000 in Federal Reserve bank note circulation.

As against the substantial decrease in Government deposits indicated, members' reserve deposits show an increase of $24,100,000, the "float" carried by the Reserve banks, an increase of $3,100,000, and net deposits a decline of $30,400,000.

Federal Reserve notes in circulation went up $2,300,000, while total cash reserves declined $4,700,000. The banks' reserve ratio, because of the relatively large reduction in deposit liabilities, shows a rise from 50.2 to 50.5 per cent.

Weekly Statement of Reserve Board Showing Banking Conditions of Nation

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Below is given the Federal Reserve Board's regular weekly statement of total debits to deposit account, reported through the Federal Reserve Banks by about 150 of the country's more important Clearing houses. Transactions cover the weekly periods ending Wednesday, July 23, and July 30, 1919.

The statement closes with a recapitulation giving comparative data by reserve districts for 155 centres reporting complete data for both weeks. Figures of reporting Clearing Houses by Federal Reserve Districts are as follows:

	Debits to Individual Account. Week Ended July 23.	July 30.	Debits to Banks and Bankers' Account. Week Ended July 23.	July 30.
New York	$5,433,175,000	$4,675,401,000	$2,037,036,000	$1,802,168,000

City.

The following promotion lists are announced:

To assistant engineer, Grade E, Department of Water Supply, G. & E., Chief Engineer, Water Supply, Manhattan: Elmer Hooper, 83.01; Patrick Quilty, 81.18.

To Medical Inspector, Grade 5, Department of Health, Chief of the Division of Institutional Inspection, general administration, Manhattan: Henry MacAdam, 87.56; Sara Canderbeck, 80.75; Hyman Finkelstone, 77.42. General administration, Queens, Robert Fowler, 85.89.

United States.

The commission announces for Sept. 9 an examination for specification engineer, for men. Vacancies in the office of the Chief Signal Officer, War Department, Washington, D. C., at $2,000 to $2,400 a year, will be filled from this examination. The duties will consist of the preparation of complete detailed manufacturing specifications for all electrical visual signaling apparatus used by the Signal Corps. Certification to fill the higher-salaried positions will be made from those who attain the highest average percentages in the examination. Competitors will not be required to report for examination at any place, but will be rated on education and general experience, 50; special experience and fitness, 50.

The prerequisites are graduation from a four-year high school course or education equivalent to that required for such graduation, and at least six years of engineering experience, of which at least two years must have been in the design, construction, or the testing of the apparatus above specified or in specification work pertaining thereto. The successful completion of each year of an engineering course in a college or university of recognized standing will be accepted as equivalent to one year of general experience. Applicants must have reached their twenty-fifth but not their forty-fifth birthday on the date of the examination.

Education Notes.

The special committee of the Board of Education will meet on Tuesday to consider the building program for 1919 and the modifications to it recently recommended by the Board of Superintendents.

State Commissioner Finley has notified the State Board of Regents that the annual convention of the State University in October next will be devoted to the consideration of the enforcement of the laws affecting public schooling, particularly the Americanization and continuation acts.

The notice for the examination for men Principals to be held on Nov. 28 says that the eligible list resulting from it is not expected to exceed fifty. The plan of the examination was devised to reduce the number of successful candidates to a minimum. Candidates are required to file prior to Oct. 15 application of intention to take the examination.

The Board of Estimate has been requested to transfer to the special high school fund and public school library fund the sum of $52,780, representing the apportionment of $26,390 for the State University and a similar amount appropriated in the budget for 1919 for books, apparatus, &c.

TRANSFER CHARGE DECLARED ILLEGAL

District Attorney Lewis of Kings County Denies Service Commissioner's Authority.

QUOTES COURT OF APPEALS

Says Buffalo Case Has No Bearing Upon Situation Presented in New York.

FEW PUBLIC PROTESTS

Anonymous Red Placards Call Upon Passengers to Refuse to Pay Extra Charge.

When Public Service Commissioner Lewis Nixon gave the surface railroad companies the right to charge two cents for transfers he acted without authority and in defiance of the express provisions of law, according to a statement issued yesterday by District Attorney Harry E. Lewis of Brooklyn. The law, Mr. Lewis says, gives the commission power to regulate and reduce fares and 'not to regulate and increase fares. He said the power assumed by the commission to increase the rate of five cents for a continuous ride within the city's limits violated Sections 181 and 182 of the railroad law.'

Mr. Lewis explained that the Public Service Commissions law vests the commissions with the same limited authority. Then Mr. Lewis's statement reads:

"To my mind the language 'regulate and reduce' does not give the right to the Public Service Commission to 'regulate and increase' nor is my opinion affected by the recent decision of the Court of Appeals in the matter of the application of the International Railway Company. In that case, which is relied upon by the Public Service Commission, the Court of Appeals had before it the so-called 'Milburn agreement,' an agreement between certain railways in the city of Buffalo, and the city.

"In that agreement it was provided: 'Nothing in this contract contained shall be construed to prevent the Legislature from regulating the fares of said companies or either of them.'

"The Court of Appeals did no more than to hold that the power to regulate rates under that agreement involved the power to increase them if inadequate as well as reduce them if excessive.

"In my judgment that decision has no application to the facts now before the Public Service Commission. The power reserved in the Milburn agreement was the general power to regulate, while the power now invoked by the Public Service Commission from Section 181 of the railroad law is the very restricted power to 'regulate and reduce.'

"The power of the Public Service Commission to 'regulate' under the statute can only be exercised after a hearing and an investigation of the facts.

"The decision to permit charges for transfers was rendered almost immediately after the decision of the Court of Appeals in the international railways case. Will the people ever be able to obtain as speedily from the public officials intrusted with power a reduction of fare when the situation warrants and demands it?"

The imposition of the two-cent transfer charge on the lines of the New York Railways Company and the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company was attended yesterday with the same quiet yielding to the charge which marked its advent on Friday. There is always some disorder in the transportation business in big cities arising out of disputes between the public and the employes, and the average number of these cases has not increased. Reports from inspectors of the Public Service Commission were as reassuring as on the initial day of the charge.

There was some confusion at a number of points along the lines of the roads, but this was mainly due to the unfamiliarity of the public with the best methods of paying for needed transfers. Those passengers who found themselves without the necessary 2 cents, and with nothing smaller than a large coin or a bill, fretted often because of the delay, but their discomfort was largely the result of unfriendly remarks of other passengers who were incommoded by any delay.

Small placards were sent out on Friday night carrying this message, in red ink:

FIVE CENTS FARE-OR-NOTHING!
Demand Transfer Before Paying Five Cents.
If Conductor Refuses to Give Transfer,
PAY NOTHING AT ALL!
He Has No Right to Put You off the Car!
Workers' Committee of New York City.

According to the postmark the messages were mailed early yesterday morning. The messages were barren of the printers' union label.

COAL OUTLOOK BRIGHT.

Anthracite Bureau Predicts a Sufficient Supply for Winter.

The Anthracite Bureau of Information, 437 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, in a statement says that there is every reason to believe that there will be sufficient supplies of anthracite coal for domestic use during the Winter of 1919-20, provided "there is no marked diminution of labor supply and also provided that next Winter is not of undue severity and that consumers continue to spread their orders, that the mines may be worked steadily during favorable weather."

"A continuous flow of coal from the mines," the statement continues, "is the best guarantee against any coal shortage next Winter, and a continuous flow of coal depends upon continuous purchasing."

The total shipment of anthracite coal for April, May and June of this year was 16,556,221 tons, as compared to 15,713,658 tons in corresponding months of 1918, this being an increase of about 800,000 tons.

CLEMENCEAU'S HOLD DEPENDENT ON TREATY

Failure of American Senate to Ratify the Defense Agreement Would Be a Blow to Premier.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—The fight in the American Senate for ratification of the Franco-American guarantee treaty is being followed here with the closest interest, especially since it is realized as a result of the communication of certain documents to the Chamber's Peace Commission that the Senate's refusal to ratify may have a decisive influence in French politics generally and on Premier Clemenceau's position in particular.

These documents consist of two letters from Marshal Foch pointing out the minimum requirements for France's safety against German aggression, which he wished inserted in the Peace Treaty, and also a memorandum in reply from M. Clemenceau himself agreeing with Foch's arguments and the necessity for the proposed measures. THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learned some time ago from military sources that Marshal Foch's demands represented not only his own opinion but the conscientious views of leading French war chiefs, and it also was said that the Marshal insisted on the importance of maintaining on the Rhine an American force considerably larger than the seven or eight thousand men now staying there.

These clauses were not, however, included in the Peace Treaty owing to the objections raised in the Council of the Big Four, but the anxiety of Foch and Clemenceau was allayed by the Franco-Anglo-American guarantee treaty, which virtually was compensation for their absence. In public and before the French Peace Commission Clemenceau has maintained this viewpoint in reply to criticisms that the Peace Treaty and League of Nations did not afford France sufficient protection. In fact, a guaranteed treaty has become the principal plank in his defense of his conduct of negotiations.

The Premier's opponents have been quick to see the effect that may be caused in the country by American refusal to ratify the guarantee treaty, and it is stated that the Peace Commission has decided to publish Marshal Foch's letters and Clemenceau's memorandum also immediately. His supporters on the commission vainly opposed this course, realizing as they did that should the treaty fail to be ratified in America the Premier would stand condemned by the highest expert of military opinion and out of his own mouth as well.

W. C. C. S. TO SHIFT SPHERE.

Will Devote War Welfare Organization to Peace Uses.

The War Camp Community Service, which has provided comfort and entertainment in the last two years for more than 4,000,000 men in uniform, is planning to devote itself toward community service, it was announced yesterday. Rowland Hayes, director of the organization in New York, described the plan yesterday as follows:

"The War Camp Community Service has received requests for co-operation of various kinds from many permanent peace-time organizations. In addition, we have been asked for assistance by the representatives of several practically unorganized bodies.

"The new work will be carried on by the same trained organization that was so successful in war work. This was decided upon because New York War Camp Community Service is in the position of a plant that has been making munitions during the war. Its machinery, instead of being scrapped when the war work is finished, is to be used for production to meet peace-time demands. New York Community Service inherits this efficient machinery, and already has enough orders in hand to keep it running for many months. The question is not what to do, but to select out of the many things to be done.

"The Community Service program includes direct work for three great groups—sailors of the navy and mercantile marine, strangers in the city, and the detached individuals of the large foreign groups living and working here. Community Service will care for all of these, although, whenever possible, it will do so in co-operation with the agency doing the right kind of work."

JUDGE MAY LAUDS POLICE.

Tells Grand Jury Their Testimony "Is Worthy of Belief."

A tribute to the police was paid by County Judge May in Brooklyn in discharging the July Grand Jury.

"During your consideration of various cases you have had public officials before you," he said, "and may have had policemen in particular who have testified concerning crimes that were committed, and I am sure you will agree with me when I say that in the main the testimony given by these men is worthy of belief.

"I read in the newspapers yesterday where after a certain trial there was an acquittal in a crime of a minor degree and a petit jury then made recommendations that in that particular kind of crime no conviction should follow the testimony alone of police officers."

The Judge was referring to the case of Miss Helen Edwards, in which Judge McIntyre condemned the practice of Magistrates in convicting on the testimony of detectives.

"I have no fault to find with that petit jury nor have I the desire to take issue with any other judge with reference to any particular case," continued Judge May. "But it would be an unfortunate situation were that impression to go broadcast among the community that our police officers are unworthy of belief."

NEW RANKS IN AIR FORCE.

British Decide On New Titles to Deferentiate the Service.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—King George has assumed the title of Chief of the Royal Air Force.

New titles for the commissioned ranks in the air force have been given by King George, namely Marshal of the Air, corresponding with Field Marshal; Air Chief Marshal, corresponding with General; Air Marshal, corresponding with Lieutenant General; Air Vice Marshal, corresponding with Major General, and Air Colonel Commander, corresponding with Brigadier General.

The idea in giving the ranks is to preserve the independence and integrity of the air force as a separate service. The titles will come into operation immediately.

Miss Winne to Work in Serbia.

Miss Helen Winne, Director during and since the war of the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club of the National League for Women's Service, has sailed for the other side to take up relief work in Serbia, under the auspices of the Serbian Relief Committee. She will devote herself to hygiene for children. Members of the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club were at the pier when the Presidente Wilson, upon which Miss Winne sailed, departed.

JEWS IN DESPERATE PLIGHT IN SERBIA

Report Says Members of Race in Belgrade Need $5,000 a Month Until End of 1920.

BULGARIAN OUTLOOK BETTER

Investigator Urges Shipments of Food and Clothing to Rumania.

Reports of the condtion of Jews in the Balkan countries, as made to the American Jewish Relief Committee by its investigators abroad were made public yesterday. They show that economic ruin, epidemics of typhus, tuberculosis, and other diseases have fallen to the lot of Balkan Jews to an extent equal to that suffered by their co-religionists in other war-torn countries, but that political and religious repressive measures have been lacking.

The first detailed account of the situation in Serbia in many months is from Dr. Isaac Alcalay, Chief Rabbi of Serbia, with headquarters in Belgrade. Writing June 17, he said Belgrade was still without regular communication with the provinces, because the railroads and bridges destroyed by the Austrians have not been restored.

"During the war," he wrote, "Jews in Belgrade suffered proportionately more than the rest of the population. Most of their habitations were exposed to gunfire throughout the fifteen months that the city was under bombardment. Almost all houses are destroyed. The Jewish population of the city, formerly 8,000, now numbers no more than 4,500. The number is being increased daily by returning refugees. Many men are still with the colors.

"Economically, the Serbian Jews have suffered terribly. Because of the uncertain political situation, all regular commerce is impossible, and it is difficult for Jewish citizens to improve their condition. This has deprived Jewish institutions of financial aid from the native population. Jewish schools are totally destroyed, and the children cannot be educated.

"Such a situation is unfortunate, for the war has brought us new duties. The Jews of Old Serbia took a very active part in the Balkan wars and in the world war. The years of fighting have deprived more than 400 families of their bread winners. These people have to be helped. We have also to take care of the invalids and orphans. It is necessary to build an orphan asylum, and means must be provided to rehabilitate those disabled by wounds. If American Jewish relief societies can continue the monthly help of $5,000 until the end of 1920 we feel that all the disabilities and misfortunes will gradually disappear."

In Bulgaria, according to a report from Miss Hetty Goldman of this city, the condition of the Jews is somewhat better than in Serbia. Poverty is not so widespread, nor are health conditions so bad.

"The communities throughout the country," Miss Goldman says, "are well organized. At the head is a Grand Rabbinat. He is assisted by a central Jewish consistory, which has supervision of the Jewish communities in all the cities. In thirty-three cities there are community councils and a school committee elected by the people and approved by the Government.

"The families of Jewish soldiers receive allotments ranging from 45 to 70 levas a month, according to the size of the family. Recently the maximum was raised to 90 levas to meet the rising cost of living. The pensions will be continued for widows and orphans.

"Bulgarian Jews are able to meet the needs of their own poor, but they have recently been confronted with a new responsibility. Rumanian Jews are taking refuge in Bulgaria, and their Bulgarian coreligionists are at a loss to know what to do with them. There is no work, even for skilled artisans, and workers who have no knowledge of the Bulgarian language can do nothing.

"A soup kitchen is being run for these people of Sophia, but many are desperate. An allotment from our American Jewish relief funds must be made to care for them."

In Rumania there is need of clothing and staple foods. It was Miss Goldman who made the investigation in this country also.

"The people needed clothing above everything else," her report reads. "Almost everybody is shabby, and a large percentage of the poor are practically without clothing. I went into many houses where the inmates had on mere rags or were huddled in torn blankets or sacking.

"The second greatest need is for staple foods, such as dry beans, peas, rice, vegetable fats, and the like. Such supplies as are to be had are sold at exorbitant prices. American Jewish relief committees should send clothing and food for about 35,000 persons. Only if this is done will they have protection against the hardships of next Winter.

"I was painfully impressed by the number of sick in Rumania. In Bucharest, out of a Jewish population of 45,000 there was an average of eight funerals a day last Winter. A large percentage of typhus cases in Bucharest and Jassy have been among Jews. The lack of clothing, especially of clean underwear, has been a contributing cause. The inability to obtain fuel made families huddle in their rooms. Some did not go outside their homes practically all Winter."

Machinery for the effective distribution of relief in the Balkan countries is in operation. More than $200,000 worth of supplies, including several tons of kocher meat, was sent from New York late in July to Constanza, Rumania. The American Jewish Relief Committee, under the Chairmanship of Louis Marshall, plans to continue regular shipments of this kind to the Balkans and to Poland, Galicia, Czechoslovakia, and the other countries.

For this purpose a fund of $35,000,000 is being sought in the United States this year. Campaigns are scheduled for about twenty States in the early Fall. Other States have held their campaigns. These funds have made possible the shipment since Jan. 1 of more than $8,000,000 worth of foods, clothing, medicines, and other supplies.

NAVY TO SELL SEAPLANES.

265 Machines Will Be Offered to Commercial Companies.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Acting Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt announces that Secretary Daniels has authorized the sale of 265 seaplanes belonging to the navy. Mr. Roosevelt says that the sale of these machines will give commercial airplane transportation companies an opportunity to buy high-speed machines of large carrying capacity ready for immediate delivery. He says that a number of such routes are already in operation or contemplated in the near future, such as from New York to Atlantic City, San Pedro to Santa Catalina, Key West to Havana, Chicago to Milwaukee and other lake cities, and a projected route to the Bermuda Islands.

The sale will include 83 RS-2 pusher biplanes, each with 330 horsepower Liberty motors; also 72 H-6 and F-5 tractor biplanes, each with two 330 horsepower Liberty engines.

The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, salvage and sale section, will issue complete schedules of the sale, giving the characteristics of all the machines to be sold, their location, appraised value, specifications, and terms.

Red Cross Starts a Life Saving Course; Plans Thus to Save 10,000 Lives a Year

The American Red Cross has established a Red Cross Life Saving Corps to spread broadcast a knowledge of improved methods of saving the lives of persons suffering from submersion. In announcing this organization, it is asserted that 10,000 persons a year are drowned in this country whose lives could be saved by modern methods. Few life guards, it is added, understand the best process of restoring those in danger of death by drowning.

Captain Frederic C. Mills, in charge of the life-saving activity of the Red Cross Atlantic Division, gave a demonstration of the "Shafer prone-pressure" method of resuscitation used by the Red Cross at Fort Tilden, Rockaway, last night. All official life-saving crews at beach resorts are being taught this practice, which is described as follows by Field Agent Wilbert E. Longfellow of the new organization:

"Taken out of the element which causes smothering, the patient, in the case of drowning, should first be held upside down at an angle of about forty-five degrees, and the floating ribs pressed and released several times, allowing the water to run out of the mouth. Then the patient should be placed face downward on a flat surface, the hands pulled from under the body and left higher than the shouldle rlevel, this action raising the chest walls. In this position the tongue will drop forward out of the throat, and the fluid will continue to run out of the mouth. The back of one of the patient's hands may be placed under his cheek to protect it from the dirt.

"The operator kneels astride the hips of the patient and rests his hands over the patient's floating ribs. By leaning the weight forward, with straight-arm pressure, out goes the water. The pressure is released suddenly, and in comes the air. Repeating this form twelve to fifteen times a minute gives more air than natural breathing and three times as much as any other method of resuscitation.

"When the patient is sufficiently resuscitated to be able to swallow—in other words, is conscious—it may be necessary to give stimulants. If the patient's hands are cold and clammy he should be covered with a blanket, coat, canvas sail, or anything that will help to increase the body temperature. A cup of hot black coffee or hot tea is a safer stimulant than any alcoholic liquids. One or two teaspoonfuls of aromatic spirits of ammonia in half a glass of water is another stimulant that can be used.

"Work of resuscitation after the rescue cannot be begun too quickyl. No patient should be carried any distance for shelter or to a doctor, but efforts to resuscitate should be begun at once. Send for a doctor at once, but begin work on the patient at once, also."

ASKS ACCOUNTING OF BENNETT ESTATE

ABOUT $43,000 AT ISSUE

Alleges Discrepancy Between Figures Offered in 1890 and Since Death of Late Trustee.

A suit was started yesterday in the Surrogate's Court by Harland B. Tibbetts in behalf of William Travers Jerome, calling on the executors of the estate five bonds and mortgages aggregating accounting of the trust fund of Mrs. Jeannette Bell, a sister of Mr. Bennett.

Mr. Jerome, who was appointed last November to succeed James Gordon Bennett as trustee of this trust fund, alleges that he has received from the estate five bond and mortgages aggregating in value $676,159.12, but he asserts that this is not the full amount of the trust. The petition of Mr. Jerome says James Gordon Bennett, in an action begun by himself to have his account approved in 1890, placed the value of the trust at $719,381.02. At that time Mr. Bennett asked that his account be allowed and his liability as a trustee fixed and stated. That action, however, never went to trial, and at no time, during his trusteeship from the death of his father in 1872 to his own death in 1918 did he make an accounting.

The petition contains no allegation of abuse of trust on the part of James Gordon Bennett, but asks for the accounting for the purpose of locating the other securities, which are expected to make up the apparent shortage of about $43,000.

"Your petitioner verily believes," the petition says, "that there are other assets belonging to the trust estate, but he has been and is unable to discover or identify the same. In order that your petitioner may properly administer his trust, it is necessary that an accounting be had of the acts and proceedings of the said James Gordon Bennett as trustee and of the trust property which came into his possession, and that any such property not already delivered over to your petitioner as successor trustee be forthwith so delivered."

The petition sets forth the names and addresses of all persons known to be interested in the Bennett estate and concludes as follows:

"Wherefore, your petitioner prays that a citation issue to the above-named persons, returnable before this court, to show cause why Rodman Wanamaker, Eugene Higgins, and Guaranty Trust Company of New York, as executors of James Gordon Bennett, deceased, should not account for the acts and proceedings of the said James Gordon Bennett as trustee of the trust created in and by the last will and testament of James Gordon Bennett, Sr., and why said executors should not turn over to your petitioner, as successor trustee, any and all assets and property which may have come into their possession or under their control, belonging to the trust estate, and why your petitioner should not have such other and further relief as to the court may seem just in the premises."

WAR COLLEGES TO STAY.

American Institutions in Paris and London to be Permanent.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 2.—Not only will the American colleges be continued for the present in Paris and London for Americans who are in military service, but they are to be made permanent. A new building for the American college in Paris will be constructed this Fall, and it was announced today that the French Government had given a site valued at $100,000 for the purpose.

Both from the office of the American Union in Paris and from the office of the Rev. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes of Yale, Chairman of the Trustees of the Union, it was announced that the work of the Union, which had been originally established primarily to meet the needs of American college men in war service, was to be continued.

At a recent meeting in New York attended by the President or other representative of forty of the leading American institutions of learning messages of appreciation were read from President Wilson, M. Tardieu, formerly the French High Commissioner; M. Poincaré, and many others expressing appreciation of the work of the Union and urging that it be placed on a permanent basis.

The Board of Trustees plan to inaugurate a campaign in the Autumn to obtain the money necessary to erect the permanent building in Paris. The trustees also have decided to raise an endowment fund to help maintain the work, although considerable support will continue to come from the American universities and colleges.

President Won't Speak at Camp.

OLD ORCHARD, Me., Aug. 2.—The announcement last night on the supposed authority of an officer of the Old Orchard Camp Meeting Association that President Wilson would speak at the camp grounds on Aug. 25 proves to have been erroneous. It was due to a misunderstanding.

WAR PROHIBITION SHUTS FEW SALOONS

Many Places Kept Open in the Hope That the President Will Soon Annul Emergency Act.

LAX ENFORCEMENT CHARGED

Movement to Put Ban Upon Tobacco Alleged to Have Been Started in the South and West.

The great majority of the saloons in New York City have survived the first month of War Prohibition, although most of them are weathering a period of poor business for the sake of prosperous days which are expected in the last three or four months of the year between the date on which President Wilson is expected to nullify the War Prohibition Act and Jan. 16, 1920, when the Constitutional Amendment goes into effect.

Spells of hot weather have enabled many saloons to do a big business in beer containing 2.75 per cent. of alcohol, while in the absence of interference, many saloons have carried on a more or less open sale of harder liquors, including whisky. There is some difficulty, at least, in getting whisky and the price has become high, which condition was vividly shown in Jersey City early last week when on successive days a large number of men were taken unconscious from one pier in Jersey City, where they had found access to wood alcohol. Five of them died in three days from wood alcohol poisoning.

The fact that saloon keepers are still able to eke out an existence at least and that they look for a flush time in the last few months of the year is demonstrated by their disinclination to surrender licenses. Only 162 saloon licenses were surrendered in Manhattan on July 1. About 100 were reported surrendered in Manhattan on Aug. 1, by the State Excise Department, which had not completed its report of surrenders yesterday.

Lax enforcement of the law is charged by the Anti-Saloon League in a statement by Andrew B. Wood, Assistant Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League.

"We need not expect, under an incomplete law, and that only partially enforced," says Mr. Wood, "to cure within the space of one month the ills of a system which has been in vogue for generations.

"Two things are apparent. First, there is meagre enforcement of the dry law in New York City, else it would be impossible for the offenders to continue spending their money for liquor. Second, there is no full-fledged prohibition law in operation here, and the slight social improvement that has been noticed is only a prophecy of what would happen if we had full prohibition, well enforced by both national and city officials.

"In the other dry cities of New York State, as in cities of other States where prohibition has been in effect for a considerable time, the beneficent and social effects are indisputable."

The National Association Opposed to Prohibition asserted yesterday that organizations which fought for prohibition are starting a crusade against tobacco.

"A bill has been introduced in the Georgia Legislature," the statement said, "to prohibit the use of tobacco in any form whatever, and measures have been introduced in the Legislatures of other Southern and Western States to put a ban upon cigarettes.

"Certain officers of the Anti-Saloon League have denied any participation by that organization in the anti-tobacco crusade, knowing that it would hurt the chances of prohibition as now enacted and hanging under a cloud of public revulsion, but others have bluntly admitted that nicotine will be next. The Anti-Saloon League cannot stay out without a breach of its ally, the W. C. T. U. The W. C. T. U. has been a faithful co-worker with the Anti-Saloon League for years. Now the league must either support or repudiate this anti-tobacco campaign by the W. C. T. U.

"Enough may be gathered from these results of the investigation by the Association Opposed to National Prohibition to safely conclude that the end of fanaticism is not yet. With the flush of victory over their achievement of offensive enactments of laws now hanging in the courts, the prohibitionists are, with their wonted stealth, going further with their pernicious mission of crushing liberty and confiscating property. The majority of the American citizenry merely laughed when these same bands of self-styled reformers announced twenty years ago that they would make the country dry. Persons identified with the tobacco industry today, in the light of all that has happened, would be reprehensibly tardy if they lost a moment laughing at the menace which the Association Opposed to National Prohibition has unmasked."

LABOR UNREST IN JAPAN.

Strikes in Large Cities Due to High Cost of Living.

TOKIO, July 29, (Associated Press.)—Because of the steadily increasing cost of living, with the price of rice soaring daily, labor unrest is spreading in Japan. Numerous strikes have occurred in Tokio, Yokohama, Osaka, and Nagoya. In some cases women have addressed the strikers.

Virtually all the newspapers are daily making bitter attacks upon the Government for its failure to regulate the cost of necessities.

SEES SOLDIERS NEAR PENURY IN JOB HUNT

Re-employment Bureau Declares Many Ex-Service Men Are Driven to Despair.

APPEALS TO EMPLOYERS

Secretary Smith Asks Them to Strain a Point to Provide Positions.

Many former service men, unable to obtain employment, are in despair, according to Alfred L. Smith, Executive Secretary of the Re-employment Committee and the Re-employment Bureau, 505 Pearl Street, who issued a special appeal to employers yesterday, asking them to make sacrifices if necessary in order to give employment to the discharged men. Some who have reached the end of their resources, Mr. Smith said, are men who a few weeks ago had some means, but who have spent their money in sustenance during the time they have been conducting a fruitless search for employment. Some of them also, he said, are too proud to ask assistance from welfare organizations and, being too honest to resort to illegitimate methods, feel that there is nothing to do but to give up the fight.

"During the last week," Mr. Smith went on, "we have had numerous former service men applying at the Re-employment Bureau for positions who have admitted that they were without money with which to buy lunch. Other applicants have admitted they did not have the car fare necessary to take them in search of work in various parts of the city. The bureau is not allowing these boys to go without lunch or without car fare, but I am mentioning these things as a reason why employers should strain a point to give former service men jobs. These boys are Americans, they are New Yorkers, and they have won honors abroad.

"It is true these ex-fighters were paid in full when they received their discharge. They also got a bonus of $60 each. But the majority of them had to buy new clothes. What they had left was spent during the time they were out of the service. We admit that some of them have been too liberal with what money they got, but that does not alter the fact that we must provide employment for each and every man who was with the colors when this nation faced the greatest crisis in its history.

Most Are Inexperienced.

"It is no reflection upon the Re-employment Bureau or upon the employers of New York to admit that there are thousands of jobless ex-service men in this city. The trouble is that, while there are hundreds of vacant positions, the jobless men are either young and inexperienced and without special training, or are executives, professional or technical men, who find it difficult to connect during the dullest season of the year. The great demand today is for skilled mechanics and ordinary unskilled labor, for these positions most of the applicants are entirely unfitted and would not satisfy the employers were they hired for such jobs.

"Scores of men who got married before they went overseas are desperately seeking work. One man who called at the bureau the other day was willing to take a job at $16 a week so as to be able to buy food for his mother and his wife. We have scores of men who are practically the sole support of their parents.

"Of course, the various welfare organizations that are paying the expenses of the Re-Employment Bureau would be only too glad to help any service man who needs financial assistance. But these boys will not go to such agencies. They are frank when talking with the personnel of the Re-Employment Bureau, the employes of which were practically all in the service, but when advised to apply for relief at a philanthropic organization they refuse to do so.

"'All I want is a job' is the universal cry of the ex-fighter who is up against it today.

"These men are not trying to capitalize the fact that they were in the service. The majority of them take off their uniforms within a few days after getting out of the service. They apply at the Re-Employment Bureau because they know we are placing hundreds of men every week in positions."

Need Is Urgent.

Mr. Smith said he was confident there would be jobs for every one within a short time, but, he repeated, it is imperative that work be found immediately for hundreds of ex-service men who cannot finance themselves much longer.

In connection with this redoubled effort to obtain positions for men whose money is running low Mr. Smith explained the methods of the bureau. The campaign for positions and the placing of the men are two distinct activities though carried on in close co-operation. The campaign for jobs is chiefly carried on through letters and similar publicity. The man and the job come together in the placement division, where the soldier is interviewed by a placement man, who is a specialist.

The applicant goes from the Registration Bureau to the filing division, where his card is examined and a note made of the proper placement section to which he should be referred. From the filing division the applicant passes to the vocational division, where he has the benefit of good advice.

When an employer telephones for men he is referred directly to the placement section, interviewing men of the type required. Likewise, all positions brought in by the procurement solicitors and those coming in by mail are properly classified and sent to the proper placement desk. Each placement man, therefore, has before him the positions vacant in his line. As each placement man interviews an applicant he runs over the vacant jobs available, and, if he finds one which he thinks the applicant can fill he calls up the employer to ascertain whether or not the job is still open. If the job is open the man is referred to the employer with a card of introduction. The next day the placement man, if he has the time, calls the employer on the telephone to find out if the man was accepted. Frequently this call results in requests for more men.

Schiff Gives $35,000 to Zionists.

The Zionist Organization of America announced yesterday that recently Jacob H. Schiff had made donations totaling $35,000 to the Palestine Restoration Fund of the Zionist Organization of America, one of $25,000 toward the school budget of this fund, and one of $10,000 to the American Zionist Medical Unit. The total of Mr. Schiff's contributions to this cause since January, 1918, is $85,000.

Certificate for Wounded Soldiers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—A special certificate to be issued to soldiers wounded in the war with Germany has been approved by the War Department. It will bear at the top the legend "Columbia Gives to Her Sons the Accolade of the New Chivalry of Humanity," and below the name, rank, and unit of the soldier and the action in which he was wounded.

COMMONS JESTS ON SILENT LAUREATE

But Dr. Bridges Sharply Says He Won't Tell Whether He Is Writing a Peace Ode.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The fact that England possesses a poet laureate whose lyre has been silent for a considerable time was recalled in Parliament when Horatio Bottomley inquired whether the laureate had up to the present written any peace ode or other poem commemorative of Britain's part in war. On receiving a negative reply Mr. Bottomley suggested that, as a part of the laureate's official remuneration consisted of cash payment in lieu of a supply of Canary wine, the Government might furnish the wine on the off chance of the laureate getting inspiration.

Mr. Bonar Law said that he would have to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which course would cost the country the more.

The poet laureate is Dr. Bridges, who was found by a reporter for The Evening News in his lovely garden, back of Merton College, Oxford.

"Have you seen a report of the question and answer in Parliament?" Dr. Bridges was asked.

"No," was the reply, "I've not, but I've heard about it."

"What do you say about it?"

"Nothing," said the poet laureate. "I don't care a damn."

"This sort of attitude," continues the reporter, "would have pleased Tennyson immensely. It is a sort of gesture of contempt from the finer spirits of the age of Philistines who dare concern themselves with the words of those on high Olympus. I did not dare to say all this to Dr. Bridges. I was more practical. I came direct to the question.

"Are you going to write a peace ode?" I asked quite respectfully.

"I won't say anything about it," was the reply, and I could not get any further. Dr. Bridges did say that there seemed to be an unnecessary amount of interest in the matter.

"I've had a lot of telegrams," he added, "but I'm not going to let myself be bothered."

"Then I can't say whether there is a peace ode to come or not?"

"You must guess," was the only reply. So I left the poet laureate in his beautiful garden reluctantly, no wiser about that ode, if, indeed, there is one either written or in process of being written.

HAWAIIAN DRY DOCK READY.

Pacific Fleet Expected to be First to Use It.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The official opening of the navy dry dock at Pearl Harbor, near Honolulu, Hawaii, late this month, will mark the successful completion of one of the most difficult engineering projects ever undertaken by the United States Government. The immense dock represents a total investment of more than $5,000,000 and has been under construction for ten years. Secretary Daniels will officiate at the christening of the dock about Aug. 25.

The dock is completed just in time to add a much needed facility for the care of the ships of the Pacific Fleet. The first vessel to enter the dock will probably be one of the dreadnoughts of Admiral Rodman's fleet, possibly the New Mexico. The dock is 1,001 feet long, 32½ feet deep, 114 feet wide at the bottom and 138 feet wide at the top. It will dock the largest ship of war now afloat or contemplated.

3,050 AT FRESH-AIR HOMES.

Association to Send 2,000 More Out of City This Year.

A total of 3,050 mothers and babies, boys and girls, have been benefited by the fresh air home of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, at Coney Island, Tuxedo, N. Y.; Saugerties, N. Y.; Hartsdale, N. Y.; North Germantown, N. Y., and Syosset, L. I. During the remainder of the Summer more than 2,000 others will be sent to homes maintained by the association.

William H. Matthews, Director of the association, said yesterday that the fresh air activities of the association will cost fully $10,000 more this year than such work on the same scale last year.

700 Y.M.C.A. WORKERS BACK.

Four Bring Brides and Four Others Adopted War Orphans.

Seven hundred and fifteen Y. M. C. A. war workers arrived yesterday at Philadelphia on the steamship Haverford and a special train brought 520 of them to New York. The Haverford was chartered especially for the war workers, of whom 205 were women. Edwin Blanchard Dean of Northfield, Minn., was in charge of the men secretaries, while Miss Barbara Deane of 510 West 140th Street, New York, and Miss Marion Russell of Detroit had charge of the women workers.

In the party were two winners of the Croix de Guerre—Newton D. Peters, formerly on duty with the 42d Division, and A. W. Palmer of Bellingham, Washington, who served for sixteen months in the French Foyer de Soldat.

Three of the Y. M. C. A. men brought French brides home with them. They were J. B. Hughes and William E. Hill, of Chicago, and Franklin T. Anderson of Boston. Four adopted war orphans were also brought back by "Y" men, a Belgian boy and a girl and two Russian boys, who were mascots of the 339th Infantry, having been picked up in Archangel when the regiment was there.

DOLLAR RATE HITS AMERICA.

Belgium Can Buy Goods Cheaper of Germany, She Says.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 2, (Associated Press.)—Belgian industrial and financial needs are being discussed in a series of conferences between Belgian and American officials.

The first meeting today was attended by representatives of the Guaranty Trust Company, the National City Bank, the American International Corporation, and the Foreign Banking Corporation, all of New York, and Henry H. Morgan, United States Consul General; Harry Collings, American Trade Commissioner, and M. Thys, representing the Ministry of Economic Affairs.

It was shown that Belgian industry has taken only $14,000,000 of the $50,000,000 credits established several months ago because the loans are too short in proportion to the high rate of interest. The present exchange on the dollar makes a 45 per cent. increase in the cost to Belgian purchasers of American goods, and if the dollar goes to eight francs it will mean a 54 per cent. increase.

On the other hand, the condition of the mark at the present time makes it possible to buy goods in Germany much cheaper than in America.

FIRST 'DEVIL DOGS' COME HOME TODAY

Heroic Second Division Was First in Action Against the Germans.

REVEALS DEEDS OF UNIT

LAUDS STAFF PREPARATIONS

Copy of Orders Before St. Mihiel Attack Shows Details of Advance.

Among the first to attack the enemy and yet among the last of the American Expeditionary Force to be welcomed home, there will arrive in New York today the advance detachments of the famous Second Division of regulars, including 16,000 marines. They return after having been in some of the heaviest engagements of the war and having been, with brief rest periods, in action from Château-Thierry to the day of the armistice. To the original 27,500 men there were 39,000 replacements, at least half of them drawn from the National Army.

What the division did was briefly summarized recently by Secretary Daniels when he pointed out that it captured the largest number of Germans of any of the American divisions, 12,026; that it suffered the greatest number of casualties of any of the American divisions, 25,078, and that it captured about one-fourth of the entire number of prisoners captured by the A. E. F., one-fourth of the total of guns, and suffered about one-tenth of the total number of casualties. Of these casualties about one-half were marines.

"More than 600 D. S. C.'s were awarded," said Secretary Daniels, "to the Second Division, more than 100 per cent. above the next highest number awarded to an American division. Of these more than one-half were awarded to marines.

"In the A. E. F. small arms matches, held in May of this year, the Second Division stood the highest of all the American divisions; the 5th Regiment of Marines stood the highest of all regiments, and Private Orville B. York, 18, of the 5th Marines, won first prize in the individual pistol match."

Tells Work Marines Did.

When the armistice was signed Major Gen. John A. Lejeune, who was in command, issued an order in which he recited the deeds of the division in the war with his estimate of the importance of their tasks. This is the order:

Headquarters 2d Division, (Regular,) American Expeditionary Forces,
France, Nov. 11, 1918.

Order:

1. An armistice between the allied nations and Germany has been signed, and hostilities ceased temporarily at 11 A. M. today.

2. It is fitting that the great part played by the 2d Division in bringing about this momentous victory over a redoubtable foe should be recounted at this time.

3. At the end of May, the enemy broke through the allied lines on a wide front west of Rheims and reached the Marne near Chateau Thierry. The safety of Paris and of the allied army itself was at stake. At this critical hour the 2d Division was deployed to meet the foe. It stopped his advance; it drove him back, and it demonstrated for all time that the American is second to none in valor, in endurance, and in the grim and unyielding determination to conquer.

4. Again, on July 18, during the last great enemy offensive, the 2d Division, after a night march of unparalleled difficulty, struck, near Soissons, the flank of the enemy's salient, penetrated his lines, and brought his offensive to a standstill. This was the beginning of the allied offensive, which has continued unceasingly and untiringly until today.

5. On Sept. 12 to 13 the American Army fought its first battle in France under American leadership. To the 2d Division was assigned the most difficult and the most important task—the capture of Thiaucourt and the Jaulny-Xammes Ridge. It reached its second day's objective on the first day, drove off the enemy's counter-attacks, and clinched the victory.

6. In the Champagne District, Oct. 2 to 10, it fought beside the Fourth French Army. On Oct. 3, it seized the Blanc Mont Ridge, the keystone of the arch of the main German position, advanced beyond the ridge and, although both flanks were unsupported, it held all its gains with the utmost tenacity, inflicting tremendous losses on the enemy. This victory freed Rheims and forced the entire German Army between that city and the Argonne Forest to retreat to the Aisne, a distance of thirty kilometers.

7. During the latter part of October, the division was ordered to join the First American Army for the great attack of Nov. 1. It was given the post of honor, and led the advance. It drove through the enemy's fortified lines to a depth of over nine kilometers, seized the heights of Bayonville and destroyed the enemy divisions on its front. On Nov. 3 it advanced to Fosse, and attacked and captured the heights of Vaux. At night, it pressed forward through the Forest of Belval by a single road and occupied the ridge near Beaumont. On the night of the 4th, it again attacked and advanced its lines to the Meuse. Finally, on the night of the 10th, it forced its way across the Meuse and seized a commanding position on the eastern bank.

8. This superb division of fighting men is unsurpassed in valor, in skill, in endurance, in determination to conquer, and in service to the cause of the Allies.

9. In this great struggle, many of our comrades have made the supreme sacrifice for our country, but their heroic spirit dwells in the hearts of the officers and men of the 2d Division.

JOHN A. LEJEUNE,
Major Gen., U. S. M. C., Commanding.

The first of the officers connected with the 2d Division to arrive in New York was Lieutenant Edward F. Parsons, who is himself a New Yorker, living at 410 Riverside Drive. He has been home a week, after having been with the famous 2d practically throughout its entire fighting career. During all this timehe was Assistant G-3 to the Chief of Operations, and in that capacity not only was familiar with the detailed movement of the troops, but actually wrote most of the field orders himself, and it is from copies of these that the story of the 2d Division is traced. Yesterday he recited the deeds of the division, and to the records already given he adde with pride that the division's Motor Transport Corps never scrapped a car, which is a record.

During its fighting days the division had three commanding Generals. It was launched into the Château-Thierry fight

STATE PARK LURES CITY HOST TO PLAY

Great Playground on Palisades Provides Free Fun for Picnickers and Campers.

ALL KINDS OF WATER SPORTS

Bear Mountain Included in Holiday Spot That Extends Up to Newburgh.

In an office on Broadway, No. 61, to be more exact, sit representatives of the Commissioners of the Palisades Interstate Park, who spend a great deal of time and waste a great deal of patience these hot days assuring the general public that they are not the Palisades Amusement Park—"No, Sir." "No, Miss"—"You've got the wrong number; this is the Palisades Interstate Park office"—and still people do not seem to be able to disconnect the two.

The amusement park is a privately owned and privately operated enterprise, with which the Palisades Interstate Park Commissioners have nothing to do, thank you, and the Interstate Park is something so much bigger and broader than mere amusement in its conception that there is little excuse for the confusion in the mind of the public.

The Interstate Park is managed by the State, and it extends all the way up to Newburgh and back from the Hudson into the Ramapo Mountains, that beautiful region where some of the finest scenery near New York is to be found.

The park began with the gift of Mrs. E. H. Harriman, a nice, comfortable little present of ten thousand acres and $1,000,000, the $1,000,000 being probably given to prevent the park's being "land poor" at the start. This project had been very near to the heart of the late E. H. Harriman for some time, and he had talked of it, but it remained unaccomplished, and it was not till after his death that his widow carried out his wish and gave his tract of land to the people, because it is for the people and used by the people. The present park on a holiday opens its arms to the poor, the tired, the city-worn. Half of the Bronx, with its babies, bottles, and buggies and adult population seems to be strewn along the shore.

There is the Italian picnic, where budding romance matures with characteristic speed and a certain young Italian gentleman, who has proved quite indefatigable in the pursuit of his fair one during the day, is rewarded by a somewhat garlicky "Yes" before the sun goes down. The thing has progressed quite openly, the young lady having received all his advances in the presence of a full set of relatives of all ages and both sexes.

Revel in the Water.

It is "Lines up!" along the slope just back from the water edge—lines up from tree to tree—one long one bearing many a towel, and all sorts and conditions of wet clothing hung up to dry—one gathers that those who had no proper bathing togs went "wading" in modified street clothing—and apparently got just as wet as if they had been bathing!

And the picnickers! Just opposite the big aluminium-painted gas tank on the Manhattan side, is a little spot with a few old lilac bushes, a fanciful crab-apple tree, a couple of clumps of honeysuckle, the latter having long since given up the struggle to produce any bloom, rows of old apple trees, and a little path with stone flag. Now, in this agreeable setting, bearing mute witness to having been the location of a human habitation not so long ago, there are long, green-painted tables and benches, all surrounded and filled with picnickers. Sometimes the tables are joined, making room for parties of two dozen or more—men and women, and girls are boys, and babies, everywhere babies. The calamity howlers who talk race suicide should come to the park and spend a day—just one day.

The picnickers, reinforcing themselves after the ardent exercise of swimming, are enjoying solid lunches, and the commissariat department, as represented by the many baskets, "suitcases," boxes and bags, containing, or which have contained, food, suggest that those exercises must have been both tremendous and long sustained. Sandwiches and immense quantities of potato salad go the rounds, as well as cakes and all the varied fruit the city markets afford, while small boys and only slightly more competent young men tend nearby fires where coffee is boiling in immense pots, and where pork and beans from cans are being heated.

Hammocks for the Tired.

At one table is a party of four men, with a woman and a baby, the young men playing cards, shuffling, dealing and playing with total and delightful unconcern. Here is one woman who has learned something about "keeping her young men at home," without owning the much-desired billiard table. Another woman is seen embroidering. There are hammocks for tired humanity—and enclosures of sand for those of active, busy years.

Here a little east-side tailor has planted himself by the shore. If you speak to him you will find he has been there since morning, and this is his little girl and boy—"Yes, she's a fine girl"—What is he catching? "Crabs"—and he has a whole bagful of them—at least two dozen, and he hopes to get more. A simple equipment of wire (like a correspondence basket, but three cornered,) a long cord, and a small heavy stone to hold like an anchor on shore—and unlimited time and patience—that's all—and see the beautiful crabs! What one does see is that in catching Mr. Crab, this little man has spent the whole day in the open, with every cast of his arm to throw the basket into the water expanding his chest and filling his lungs—full of good fresh air—to the great harm and detriment of whoever may happen to have his name (or hers) written on his insurance policy as beneficiary.

Te park has grown and been added to by many millions, both public funds and private donations. The State of New York turned over the Bear Mountain tract, and the park is often roughly divided into three sections, the Harriman gift, Bear Mountain, and Palisades. The law first setting aside land for this park may be looked up—Chapter 170 of the laws of 1900, and the other laws concerning the park and additions to it will be found in the records for 1900, 1910, and 1914, for those who like to dig up records. But sensible folk would do well to study the more human documents—the picnickers, the bathers, the campers, and the canoers who use the park and find joy and health there almost for the asking.

The Boy Scouts are up at Car Pond, where there used to be a little town. The Park Commissioners have dammed this pond and drained the meadow and made a lake—about forty-five acres—to add to the Scouts' enjoyment; likewise water works have been installed, an icehouse, &c. Here they have their scoutmasters and their tents, fires, and all the regular scout equipment.

This must not be confused with the camp of Girl Scouts, at Central Valley, which is also in the park, as the two are sufficient distant for the satisfaction of all the proprietics and most ironclad conventions, although they are near enough together to make possible a little social intercourse between the lady-counsellors of the girls' camp and the men who supervise the affairs of the boys, which is a very good thing. Must not these men remind themselves occasionally that there is a world where other things count besides the primitive arts of hunting, fishing, and campfire-making and the training of young savages (for that is what somebody has called small boys)—a world, for instance, in which there are pretty girls?

This region is, in fact, the joy of campers—at Blauvelt, not so very far away, are 324 acres where big Y. W. C. A. camps are filled with women and girls all Summer; and the amount of good done by all these camps is incalculable.

The Palisades Interstate Park Commissioners will issue individual camping permits upon application, for Bear Mountain, N. Y., at $1 a week, or for the Jersey camp sections, Alpine, $1.50 a week, or $1 a week-end of three continuous days' camping; or for Canoe Beach, N. J., $7.50 a season, permitting "canoe-camping" five days out of seven; to qualify for this last one must own a canoe, and belong to some sort of canoe club and prove oneself to be a person of some reliability, who will not go right out and get drowned, regardless-like."

To date the number of individual permits issued practically equals the total for last season, being 725, as against 734, and the greatest number are issued for Alpine camps, Bear Mountain being next and the Canoe Beach, of course, coming last. The comparative figures are:

ALL LAST SEASON.
Alpine campers	403
Bear Mountain campers	206
Canoe Beach campers	65
TO DATE THIS SEASON.
Alpine campers	391
Bear Mountain campers	255
Canoe Beach campers	79

Canoing on Increase.

From this it will he seen that the canoe business is a little better than last year. Canoes cost money, and you have to have a place to keep them. Over the kitchen sink, or in the hall closet, (capacity, one hat and one coat,) won't do for a canoe!

Take the ferry from Dyckman Street, whose large-lettered sign gives you the broad statement that it is for the park, "also Englewood and other points in New Jersey." You go down the street, across a railroad track, make a sharp turn, where on Fourth of July, Decoration Day and other Summer holidays the passenger traffic completely blocks the way, and you are at the ferry. The average number of persons visiting the park on Sundays and holidays is around 5,000.

The number of visitors is ever increasing. They come from out of town cities and towns, taking in the park as part of their seeing-New-York experience; from the poorer uptown districts, and from away downtown. There is Coney, of course, but it is not the country, and the park is the country. It will be a holiday from the start; even the nickelodeon, in overgrown Queen Anne style, is called into service and "Be a sport; I paid for the sodas; it's your turn" are the remarks bursting out from the little group which is about to extract some music. The matter is hardly decided, and the air of the latest fox-trot hardly begun to jazz forth, when the shout of "Boat's in!" causes a sudden rush to get in line.

The ferryboat boasts music aboard—a harp and a violin—and two Mexican women, one young and somewhat thin, and the other older and decidedly fatter sigh, roll their dark eyes, and look as though they would like to fall on the necks of the dilapidated musicians. "La Paloma" and the older one's intense desire, constantly expressed and reiterated in Spanish, that the younger one keep back from the front of the boat (same representing to her the entire front deck) because it was dangerous—"muy peligroso"—when they stopped, seemed to be about all they got out of the trip, but not so with the other groups. One hears Yiddish, Italian, Hungarian, French, and other languages staccatoed on top of the regular background of English. There was the large, blond mother with her brood of small, fat little girls and boys, the girls very busy "minding" the boys, who were not "minding" them, if any one asked you. They kept up a constant conversation; while the mother was enjoining Frances to "watch out for Eddie," Frances was chirping: "Yer dropped yer fan, yer dropped yer fan." "Ain't you smart" the mother considered the proper manner of administering a soft reproof to Frances.

Then followed a rapid-fire discussion of everything between Frances, the other girl, and the two boys—opinions on swimming and the relative buoyance of fresh and salt water, the biggest girl maintaining that she could swim, only not in salt water. The boat came near some channel marks. "It's deeper where they put the stick, I tell yer." "No, 'taint; it's lower," and so on until the ferryboat was almost opposite the landing. Only one passenger at least listened no more, but admitted, while the boat was still far enough out in the stream to permit one to do so, the wonderful picture presented by the shore at this point—against the sky, the Palisades themselves, like huge, square, rocky battlements; below the luxuriant green of well grown trees, while at the right descended an enchanting foamy waterfall, looking like a light veil hung airily over the face of the rock. The landing place is a rustic structure which does not interfere too much with the picture.

Bathers in Motley Garb.

Alpine and all the camps lie to the north of the landing, but the one-day picnickers and the bathers are to be found in their strength by turning to the south—anything and everything is the order of the day in bathing attire—almost everything "goes." Here, for instance, is a child in a scapular and part of Pa's old B. V. D.'s. It is a sort of super-swimmin' hole, very much enlarged—stones and dirt no bar to a good time—and there are many standards of cleanliness, anyway. The water is at least wet—and cool—and Old Sol is scorching overhead. There are groups showing three generations, sonny's son climbing upon sonny's father. One sees new and fancy ideas in swimming, the latest thing in the Australian-east-side crawl, &c., and a big log to roll off and hang onto represents bliss unbelievable to a lot of young kiddies.

"Everything is comparative in this world," said the sage—and what is happiness?

There are family parties wishing they could defy the high cost of living, "like this" every day. "Pa" has been hanging most of his clothes on the "hickory limb" of tradition, not to mention "Ma's" best linens suit and outside petticoat with the lace flounce! "Pa" is imbibing water from a quart bottle, and, at the moment, cares nothing about prohibition—that water tastes "good" to "Pa."

A plump young girl on a rock tries to look unconcerned for the full ten minutes that it takes a red-headed boy to stalk her with his camera—his bare feet find the stones sharp—and her efforts to look unconcerned and to keep her elaborate pose result in her final tumble—plop!—into the water—just as he was about ready to "snap" her.

A family in khaki—mother and the children—come down from the campe—goes by. Also a tall, slim young girl, looking like a study for Diana, with smooth, olive-tanned cheek, long golden hair flowing out from under a ribbon crossing her brow fillet fashion, long brown arms swinging. She is beautiful and one looks after her with real pleasure, one's contemplation being abruptly broken into by the excited comment of a less attractive female, coming from the opposite direction, who cries: "Hold me up," and executes the first movement of a faint to the great amusement of her companions.

Then there is the stringpiece with the crowd of men and boys fishing and crabbing, feminine society being strictly of the advisory sort. There are fishing boats, one of which a small boy eagerly points out as going all the way down the bay to fish; canoes with people sculling, paddling, rowing. Then there is one canoe with a girl and boy and a phonograph, which, like Omar's famous loaf, and jug and thou, deserves honorable mention as "Paradise enow."

Here are two of the niftier sort of bathers taking it easy—he and she in their bathing suits, here a charming black satin affair. The grassy green slope nicely supports their backs; their feet are raised and braced against convenient tree trunks. They carol grand opera airs blithely.

Children Pick Flowers.

There is a smell of wild sweet clover in the air, the white spiky clusters which the children like, and pink "Bouncing Bet." Two small toddlers go by with hands clutching faded remains of both these plebeian blossoms, but they are obviously unable to read the signs, which printed in a light and cheerful green and tacked to tree trunks in conspicuous positions say, variously:

Don't Pick or Destroy the Wild Flowers.

Others Want to See Them.

This Park Is Yours,
Please
Help Us Take Care of It.

Luckily green apples, very sour, do not constitute wild flowers—and some small boys busily engaged in eating and stowing away as much as possible of this delectable material in their shirt fronts, are promising each other to come out again next Sunday "if they're goin' to be ripe."

A shout of, "Poison ivy" is heard and the boys fall to discussing its effects, with a strange list of antidotes. Finally one small hero says: "Aw, who's afraid? Watch me. I'll eat it, and proceeds to sample a leaf or two.

Here is a magical water-stair—which might have been the lovely original from which a certain city cabaret copied one of its features. It is a rough stairway, of Jersey sandstone, ranging in color from deep rose to violet and purple shades, the steps are very shallow, and sliding and trickling and dripping down this stairway is a continuous, gentle flow of water. The air is cool, almost cold, as though there were some gigantic electric fan forcing it down the stairway and out upon the path so cool that it may be felt as a distinct current twenty feet from the foot of the stair. Kiddies and girls are doing most of the wading here. Higher up a tree trunk has been felled and rests across the stair and on this a young and enterprising mother has perched herself, with her baby on her knee and at least one baby gets his afternoon sleep in comfortable coolness.

Festivity Nears End.

Toward evening the crowds begin to think of going home—there seems to be a general sorting out of clothing. "Wants a wear this, Bill?" says a girl, holding out what looks distinctly like a rough-dried shirt. A small child is being assisted at its toilet by its father and one hears: "Here, hurry up; let me fix it—Oh, nobody's looking at you," as the Infant apparently is overcome by embarrassment.

An up-the-river boat goes by and the late bathers make a scramble for the shore as the heavy wash catches them. A slender, white-painted yacht slides down stream, looking unreal in its elegant perfection. A tall, athletic camper balances his canoe on his chest, drops it into the water and makes off up the river, presumably to his camping home; a locust shrills out from a nearby bank, and then quite suddenly a bird is heard giving its little even-song. Youths in Palm Beach suits—and maidens arrayed in delicate Georgette crepe and organdy appear miraculously on the park benches, and the day is over—the long, hot day—of the campers, picnickers, babies, bottles, small boys and baskets, crabs and stones, green apples and cinders, in New York's big park.

by Major Gen. Omar Bundy, to be succeeded by Major Gen. C. C. Harbord in the Soissons phase, and after Soissons by Major Gen. J. A. Lejeune. From the beginning to the end, however, the Chief of Staff was Colonel, and afterward Brigadier General, Preston Brown. For him Lieutenant Parsons has the greatest admiration, especially in connection with the planning of operations.

While the big German offensive was in full swing last year the 2d Division was in a quiet sector extending south of Verdun. The rule was "shell for shell," with neither side taking the initiative. The men suffered nothing but a severe rassing. From this point they were sent to a reserve position north of Paris, but in the last week of May they were suddenly hustled down to a position north of La Ferté, near Château-Thierry. At that time French refugees were crowding the roads before the German advance.

"A few disorganized French and British troops," said Lieutenant Brown, who were in the town at the time regaled us with pictures of the terrible Germans. A French staff officer advised us to take up our position in semi-prepared system of trenches four miles south of the Bois de Belleau, but after looking it over Colonel Brown decided that we would do better in the open. Our troops had had two days and two nights of marching and were dead for sleep when they arrived. And then came the fight."

Shortly after Château-Thierry had become a matter of history, Lieutenant Parsons wrote to his father the kind of letter he could have sent had there been no censorship. He kept it so that he might bring it home with him. It reads in part:

"We have opposed to us seven German divisions and the eighth is on its way. We have badly shattered two German divisions. Our division numbers 27,000 men and a German division numbers 14,000. We have therefore faced about 98,000 men, very considerably over three times our number, and we are still fighting and are still gaining ground. That is the reason that the German high command is beginning to worry and is exaggerating our losses. The German press reports state that we hurled our whole division at the Bois de Belleau. As a matter of fact we never sent more than one battalion into the woods in any attack and never sent reserves from another battalion. A battalion has 1,000 men. These facts are all exact, neither an over nor an under statement.

Forced Germans Back.

The Germans were progressing several kilometers a day in the direction of Paris when the division came into line. They have lost ground every day since the 2d Division has been here. And this fact to my mind is most important of all.

"Taking the entire German offensive from Ypres to Rheims, the German line bulges out at every point except two. One of these points is south of Amiens, where the stand to save the railroad was made. The other dent in the German line is exactly coincident with the front of the Second Division. And the ground shown as retaken by us on the little map attached exactly represents the size of the dent in the German line of battle. In other words, when you leave alone communiqués, official and unofficial, and simply look upon the cold facts as revealed by actual lines, what is shown is this: The Second Division is the only division that has made a dent in the German offensives. This is a fact. It may or may not be a coincidence.

"Again, falling back upon figures, we see that our one division has kept almost 100,000 German line troops occupied, and not only has kept them occupied but has gained constantly against them.

"Based upon the above facts, I do not think it is an overstatement to say that with eighteen divisions like our own—that is, three army corps, which would be one army—and with an American air service and an American supply service in food, ammunition, and all else, with this we could make a drive on the German lines which would soon carry us to German territory. If one division has done as it has done to almost 100,000 Germans, then eighteen divisions could do the same thing to 1,600,000 Germans."

The German Version.

In contrast to what actually happened, the Division Information Bulletin published at the time the Wolf News Service version, as given by the correspondent of the Deutscho Tageszeitung:

"It would seem as if the use of American troops in the battle northwest of Château-Thierry on June 8 was also intended to raise the morale and confidence of the Allies. For hardly had Clemenceau given assurances of American help when some American units launched an attack. According to our army report, their success consisted in being driven back with heavy losses beyond their starting point. Such a beginning is not very promising. Furthermore, one is forced to the conclusion that the attack by the Americans was made only under French command, for alone they would not be intrusted with such a hard task. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the Americans there (probably one division) did not make this attempt alone, but were put among the French front lines. To announce an American victory was in line with Clemenceau's purpose as a way to quiet the uneasy French population."

The story of the Second Division in its other notable actions was always the same—attack and advance, attack and advance. Of course, the valor of the men has been the great factor, but the staff work has been taken for granted. The secret field orders issued from day to day have nothing of the dramatic in them, and they are dry reading. But they are the product of long and anxious hours of thinking for the staff. For instance, two days before the attack on St. Mihiel sixteen closely typewritten pages of directions were issued. They were Field Order No. 27. A few paragraphs will indicate the care with which preparation had to be made and the precision with which all movements had to be calculated:

OBJECTIVES—
First Phase Line—Northern edge of Bois d'Heiche, Hill 242.6.
First Day's Objective—Northeast corner of Bois Gerard, northern edge of Bois du Fey, Hill 277.7, Hill 264.5.
Army Objective—High ground between Jaulny and Xammes.
Exploitation Line—Point one-half kilometer south of Buret Farm, Bois de la Perrier, (inclusive,) Charey, (inclusive).
The division attacks in column of brigades, regiments side by side, each with one battalion in the first line, one in support, and one in reserve.
All troops will be in position on "D" day at "H" minus four hours.
The attack will be in on "D" day at "H" hour.
The infantry advance will start—
From the "Parallel of Departure" on "D" day at "H" hour.
From the "First Phase Line" at "H" plus six hours.
The artillery action will begin on "D" day at "H" hour by a rolling barrage preceding the infantry advance at the rate of one hundred (100) meters in four (4) minutes to the "First Phase Line," where a standing barrage will be put on the foreground until "H" plus six (6) hours, when the rolling barrage will continue to the "First Day Line" at the rate of 100 meters in four (4) minutes.
The light artillery will be brought forward in eschelon as the attack progresses.

The plan of liaison is worked out in eight chapters, the titles of which are: "I., Axis of Liaison"; "II., Radio"; "I., Axis of Liaison"; "III., Panel and T. P. S. Liaison"; "III., Panel Signals"; "IV., Signals by Pyrotechnics"; "V., Aeroplane and Balloon Liaison"; "VI., Codes"; "VII., Code Designations of Terms and Important Points"; "VIII., Liaison by Visual Signaling"; "IX., Liaison by Pigeons"; "X., Liaison by Couriers and Runners."

Under each of these heads there is worked out to the minutest detail those elements which determine success or failure in battle. The results of the battle of St. Mihiel speak for themselves and for the staff work.

FAVOR CURB ON DYE IMPORTS

Bill to License Incoming Shipments Is Reported to House.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The Ways and Means Committee has reported with some modifications the Longworth bill for the establishment of a licensing system to control importations of dyestuffs into this country. The bill as reported provides for a licensing system for a period of two years, and for the creation of a commission of eleven to have control over the issuance of licenses.

On this commission will be six representatives of consumers of dyes, four representatives of dyestuff producers, and one neutral who would serve as chairman. All the Republican members of the committee voted in favor of the report except Moore of Pennsylvania.

The Democrats voted against the bill because they were opposed to the method of selecting the members of the commission. They favored appointment of members of the commission by the President, as recommended in the original bill drafted by the Allen Property Custodian and the Chemical Foundation.

The bill provides that the representatives shall be appointed on recommendation of the various organizations of dyestuff consumers and producers. Under the bill licenses would be issued for importation of dyestuffs, the plan being to issue licenses only for those dyestuffs that are not manufactured in this country, these to be allowed to enter under a license system only until their manufacture has been well developed here. Dyestuffs that can be made here are not to be come in under the proposed license plan.

THE DUO-ART
PIANO—PIANOLA—REPRODUCING PIANO
THREE INSTRUMENTS IN ONE

As a Piano

Built in four famous makes, the Steinway, Steck, Stroud and the Weber, in the form of an upright or a grand, Duo-Art Pianos are in tone, in action and in durability, of the best that the piano market affords. The Duo-Art feature has no effect upon the piano whatever, either in the way of influencing its musical quality or interfering with its keyboard use for hand-playing, practice, etcetera.

As a Pianola

When playing any 88-note music-roll, the Duo-Art is a Pianola—the original and genuine Pianola equipped with many exclusive, patented devices which so aid you in expressing your own "musical sense" that after a short period of practice you can play any music you prefer with a degree of artistic skill that will amaze and delight you. The Pianola has no rival among player-pianos.

As a Reproducing Instrument

But musical inventive genius has added another final triumph to the piano in the Duo-Art Reproducing action. The men and women who are the past masters of the piano today come to Aeolian Hall and play their finest interpretations upon a Recording Piano. These interpretations, marvelous in technique, resplendent in tone color, are authentically reproduced upon record-rolls and are available for replaying upon your Duo-Art Piano.

With the Duo-Art Piano your home can be made a delightful center of musical entertainment, in which young and old may join

FEARS PROSPERITY MAY BE TEMPORARY

Lewis E. Pierson Warns of Need to Open Foreign Outlets for Products.

WANTS GOVERNMENT HELP

Chairman of Irving National Board Says Exchange Situation Must Be Cleared Up.

Lewis E. Pierson, Chairman of the Board of the Irving National Bank, is of the opinion that in order to keep up the commercial and industrial activity of the United States, foreign outlets for our products must not be destroyed by prohibitive conditions such as are indicated in foreign exchange tendencies of the present time. In a recent address Mr. Pierson said in part:

"We have in prodigal abundance all the material things which the rest of the world needs most—cash and credit and man power, and machine power required to make these things available to the rest of the world on fair and liberal terms, all are ours. Our amazing wheat crop and our herds of cattle and hogs alone stand between Europe and actual famine. Our steel and copper and coal must supply the scarcity which the war has wrought in every country of Europe, whether belligerent or neutral. Our railroad and factory equipment trades, our bridgebuilders and shipbuilders and builders of factories and homes must play a major part in the reconstruction of the devasted areas of Europe, which are not confined by any means to France and Belgium.

"Now we need full realization of these things and a method and an organization—necessarily on a national scale—for mobilizing the credit-gathering resources of the country and applying them intelligently to the task of financing our scales of indispensable things to a world which has all too little money and for the moment no goods to give in exchange. To create such an organization is easily within the power and the compass of the banking and business community. The establishing and safeguarding of the necessary credits present no insuperable difficulties, assuming, of course, that we attack the problem presented as sane business men have learned to attack smaller but not less difficult problems which come to them in their daily life.

Wants Government Aid.

"Nor should we make the mistake of leaving this matter entirely to the bankers. It is a business matter and the most important business matter before the American business public at the present time. The bankers are interested, actively so, and will be found willing to lead or follow in any campaign of improvement which may be necessary. But the obligation of the business man, not a banker, to get busy at once is not in the least reduced because of this fact. Government, too, labors under a heavy responsibility in this situation. Quite naturally, business men and bankers and organizations of both, cannot properly launch a national, indeed, a world plan such as the present situation clearly demands, without some assurance concerning the attitude of the Government, and as yet the Government has not acted.

"Nor must we confine our consideration of the credit feature of this world-financing process to the credit methods which have obtained in the past. The task contemplated requires that we make available to the fullest extent the values possessed by our customers throughout the world. In this process the spirit of co-operation must be so employed as to give it the substance of a fact rather than a theory. Our people must learn to invest in foreign securities as a matter of self-interest, if for no higher reason. It always has been recognized as good business to make it possible for a customer to pay his debts without unnecessary impairment of his business standing.

Warns of Prosperity.

"We are so prosperous just at the moment that we are apt to fail to realize how temporary a thing such prosperity may be. The large volume of export which has made our present prosperity possible must be kept up if this prosperity is to continue. And unless we make it possible for our friends over yonder to buy from us without crippling themselves, we, as well as they, will suffer. Our export sales will decrease, our present high power of production will diminish, our capacity to provide employment for our millions will be impaired, and, perhaps worst of all, we will have failed to justify the world's entirely reasonable expectation of us.

"Our duty, therefore, is plain—obvious almost. These wonderful resources we have, and the not less wonderful national qualities we possess—the world is willing to concede both now—should be co-ordinated in an effort, not perhaps governmental, but at least aided and sanctioned by the Government, toward the most splendid campaign of humanitarianism and, incidentally, of world business which it has ever been the privilege of a nation to direct. There should be no delay in launching an undertaking so advantageous to our own country and so essential to the welfare of the world.

"Shall we be able to play up to this part which has been set for us? Almost certainly, yes. But to do it we must utilize the very best that is in us—all of it. World vision and charity we must have, but also steadiness and the power of discrimination. Our world benefactions, if such they are to be called, should be bestowed with an intelligent consideration of the merits of the different requests for relief which will come to us from so many parts of the world."

New Farm Machines for Mexico.

The Mexican Department of Agriculture is to establish offices in some of the cities in the most fertile States in the republic for the exhibition of modern tractors and farming implements, and also to give instructions with regard to their use to the farmers who might be interested. Cordoba, in the State of Vera Cruz, a local publication says, is one of the towns selected for an office of this kind. A large tract of land will be prepared for cultivation, so that the ranchmen and farmers can have a practical demonstration of the benefits derived from the use of modern farm machinery, see the enormous production and how economically they can be run. Seed will also be furnished at a very low cost, and this will be planted and harvested, using modern methods and modern machinery with the same object in view.

STEEL PRODUCERS SEEK HIGHER PRICES

Tendency Among Independent Manufacturers to Make Further Advances.

EARNINGS ALREADY WAY UP

United States Steel Corporation's Record Year of 1907 Already Has Been Passed.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 2.—There is a more marked tendency among independent steel producers to advance prices. Three important producers of wire have advanced their prices, $2 a ton on plain and barb wire and $5 a ton or 25 cents a keg on nails, and it is asserted that others, including the United States Steel Corporation, are selling in such restricted manner that the advances have some force marketwise.

Several independent sheet interests are reported to have advanced their prices by $2 a ton on black sheet and $4 a ton on galvanized, and it is regarded as probable that some or all of the other independents will follow. In all cases mills that advance prices are already sold up, and in some cases they attained that position by having cut prices rather freely in May and June.

In the pipe trade the advance made by one independent on July 10 has not acquired much following, but it is said that small lots of tubular goods are selling at premiums for early delivery. Mills that have advanced their prices appear to have done so because they feel that an advanced price level would produce heavier specifying against old contracts. In the last six months there has been much speculation as to whether the steel industry would return to its traditional idea that the market cannot be a strong one unless prices are advancing at intervals.

The United States Steel Corporation's statement of earnings in the June quarter furnished a surprise, as the $34,331,30. reported represented a gain of $817,91: over the March quarter showing. Several independent steel companies have made reports showing reduced earnings for the second quarter, and that was in keeping with the general trend of affairs, since the country made only three fourths as much steel in the second quarter as in the first, while prices declined about $7 a ton on March 21. The explanation offered for the divergent showing made by the Steel Corporation is that while its second quarter earnings were in keeping with general conditions its first quarter had been pulled down by the filling of a large volume of old and low-priced business which the Corporation found it desirable to reinstate just before or shortly after the signing of the armistice.

The independents did not have much business of that sort. Earnings in the June quarter occurred with shipment at about two-thirds capacity, so that much larger earnings are in prospect whenever there is full mill operation as that would increase earnings per ton through operations being more economical, and at the same time involve a gain of about one-half in tonnage. The Corporation's largest earnings before the war were $161,000,000 in 1907, and that rate has probably been passed already, after deduction of Federal taxes, which are regarded as fairly stiff.

Heavy Demand for Sheets.

Buying of steel products is at about the same rate as for two or three weeks past. There is heavy demand for sheets tin plates, wire products, and pipe, particularly lap weld pipe; moderately heavy demand for bars, an indifferent demand for structural shapes, and a very poor demand for plates, rails, and railroad material generally.

Steel mill operations may be estimated as running at fully 75 per cent. of capacity, against an average for the month of July of 70 per cent. Some works are operating practically full. The midsummer months are usually very dull in the steel market, and improvement is therefore expected next month. It will probably be found, however, that some railroad buying will be necessary to give the steel industry a full operation.

The pig iron markets throughout the country are fairly steady. A few furnaces have advanced prices, while on the other hand idle furnaces have cut prices slightly in order to obtain a backlog of business upon which to resume production. Spot furnace coke shows an easy tone, as there is considerable tonnage loaded in the Connellsville region and awaiting shipping directions. The scrap market has stiffened. Heavy melting steel is now $21 to $22, depending on tonnage and grade, and the point has now been reached at which dealers could sell most of the scrap they bought from the Government at a profit.

While buyers of wire and wire products may still be able to place some tonnage with their regular sources of supply, provided they have not made formal advances in their prices, the ordinary buyer can hardly place any business except at the advances. In other words, it is more or less the case that producers are divided into two classes, those that have formally advanced their prices and those that have not done so, but are out of the market except for such sales as they are still willing to make to regular customers.

From time to time advances have been announced by the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company, the Cambria Steel Company, and the Pittsburgh Steel Company. Practically all the independent makers of cement-coated nails have made the twenty-five-cent advance, so that the price to the ordinary buyer is $3.10. Those who have not announced a new price, and thus are technically on the $2.65 basis, are not sellers to any extent. One producer is ahead of the procession with a $3.40 price.

About 90 per cent. of the sheet mills are in operation and producing full tonnages, the rest undergoing repairs and improvements. Bookings are much in excess of the rate of production. The leading interest is operating at about the same rate as the independents. Many sheet buyers who had already placed contracts which they stated would carry them to the end of the year are now placing additional tonnages. There is little inquiry about the price, it being generally understood among buyers that full prices obtain in all cases.

Advance in Automobile Sheets.

There is no disposition to sell sheets into next year, the time being too far ahead. On the one hand the slight advances that could be made now might not hold into next year, while on the other hand the market might advance by a considerable margin whereby sales at this time would have been made at too low a level. In the case of automobile sheets it is a fact that some business was done for 1920 at the $5-a-ton advance some mills recently quoted, apparently for the purpose of discouraging the buyers from taking hold.

Letting of fabricated steel contracts is proceeding apace, the volume of business increasing every week, and it is confidently expected that the business for last month will be shown by official figures to have been about equal to 100 per cent. of the fabricating capacity, a big jump from last April, when it was only 24½ per cent. The largest job at this moment is the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad bridge over the Monongahela River, involving about 6,000 tons, bids for which were filed recently. Prices on fabricated steel represent a narrow margin about the recognized market prices for the plain shapes, and it is believed that some concessions have been made in mill prices unless the fabricators were using material purchased some time ago.

Regarding iron and steel scrap, the present melting steel situation is decidedly unusual in that the scrap is actually in existence and can be shipped any time the holders make sales. In borings and turnings and various other descriptions of scrap, on the other hand, there are no large supplies in sight, and dealers have lost so frequently of late in making short sales that they now will sell only what they actually have at command.

There is an active demand for cast borings for blast furnace use, despite the market having advanced sharply, as it has done in nearly all grades, being now quotable at $16 to $16.50 for the immediate Pittsburgh district and at higher prices for outlying districts. The explanation of the demand from blast furnaces at such prices is that pig iron production costs are very high, including labor, and cast borings swell output without corresponding increase in labor and coke expense. There is a light demand for cast scrap for foundry use and for scrap for rolling mill use, but practically all grades of scrap are stiffer than a week ago, under the influence of stronger markets for heavy melting steel and a few other grades.

Estimates to date indicate that the leading pipe interest's bookings in July will be equal to three months' full production, and yet during the month this interest refrained from quoting on much of the inquiry. Independents have had somewhat the same experience, and pipe is now well sold out on lap weld, while on butt weld the bookings have mounted to approximately the capacity. Boiler tubes remain somewhat slow, but are picking up. While no independent has made formal announcement of any price advance except the Wheeling interest, there are circumstantial reports going the rounds of the trade that what amounts to a general advance in the market will occur very soon, by each mill either advancing its prices or practically withdrawing from the market. There are reports also that several of the mills have been charging delivery premiums for more than a week.

Producers of shafting and screw stock are operating at better rates. In general, departments drawing 3-inch and under are operating at capacity, while those making larger sizes are doing about 50 per cent. The situation reflects the different rates at which various consuming lines have been recovering from the war dislocations. The automobile makers were the first to recover, requiring the smaller sizes. Then came screw makers and machinery makers generally, except that there is not much large work being done such as requires the largest sizes. The cold drawing shops have been the best customers of the steel bar mills for several weeks past.

In view of English ferromanganese being regularly quoted at $105, c. i. f., the common view is that domestic producers would shade their regular quotations of $115 delivered if actual business were in sight, but it is pointed out that as customers are indisposed to buy ahead the delay in delivery of English material would be against it. It is believed here that British competition in ferromanganese is likely to be permanent.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 6,648 packages. A quiet and unchanged market. Very few buyers on the street and no disposition on the part of receivers to force business. A good deal of confidence is felt in the situation. Creamery, higher than extras, a pound, 56@56½c; extras, 92 score, 55½c; firsts, 88 to 91 score, 53@55c; seconds, 83 to 87 score, 50½@52½c; lower grades, 48½@50c; unsalted, higher than extras, 59@59½c; extras, 58@58½c; firsts, 55½@57½c; seconds, 53@55c; State dairy, tubs, finest, 54½@55c; good to prime, 51@54c; common to fair, 47@50½c; renovated, firsts, 51@52c; lower grades, 47@50c; ladles, current make, firsts, 48@49c; seconds, 46½@47c; lower grades, 45@46c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 46½@47c; No. 2, 46c; lower grades, 43@45½c.

EGGS.—17,280 cases. The week is closing with a very quiet market, very fancy new laid qualities being scarce and sustained with some firmness, but the best qualities generally obtainable are in ample supply and moving rather slowly, and the tone of the market is a little irregular, showing weakness on all medium and lower grades, of which most of the accumulation consists. The range of prices is without quotable change. Fresh gathered, extras, a dozen, 54@55c; extra firsts, 51@53c; firsts, 47@50c; seconds, 44@46c; under grades, 35@43c; dirties, No. 1, 39@40c; No. 2 and poorer, 30@38c; checks, good to choice, dry, 34@38c; under grades, 29@33c; refrigerator, special marks, fancy, buyer to assume charges, 50c; firsts, 47@49c; seconds, 44½@46½c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western henery whites, fine to fancy, 67@70c; fair to prime, 55@66c; gathered whites, common to prime, 50@66c; Pacific Coast whites, 62@68c; other Western and Southern gathered whites, 50@66c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery browns, fancy, 58@62c; gathered brown and mixed colors, graded, fancy, 55@57c; fair to prime, 45@52c.

COTTON DECLINES ON PROFIT-TAKING

Early Buying Movement Halted by Disinclination to Take Week-End Chances.

CLOSING PRICES LOWEST

Bull Position Evidently Not Secure —Trade and Ring Jump at Easy Gains.

The buying movement, which carried cotton up 200 points from the early low levels on Friday, after the Government crop report came out, and showed a surprisingly low condition as of July 25, was continued for a short time after the opening yesterday, and prices scored further gains, ranging from 15 to 25 points in distant months to 55 points in October, carrying the latter up to 35½ and the others to the equivalent of about 35¼ cents a pound. Then the market encountered fresh selling, and sagged off nearly a cent from the early tops, and about 60 to 70 points on the day. At the close the prices were at about the lowest for the day.

The selling was mainly by traders who had bought on the big rise on Friday, and who were anxious to take their profits, and get out before the close for over the week end. This profit taking was on a good sized scale, and did much to upset values. It showed plainly that the trade and the ring were still nervous, none too sure of the bull position and willing to make quick turns whenever possible. With the present uncertainty, nobody wants to be long for any great length of time, and yesterday's selling was perfectly natural.

The aftermath of the crop report brought out some interesting ideas. While the condition figure of 67.1 was far below what anybody had expected, still there was some question as to just how much of a crop of 11,016,000 bales had been discounted. A month ago the indicated crop was 30,000 bales below the July 25 figure, and despite the low condition percentage, the trade was inclined yesterday to go slowly to new commitments on the long side.

The following shows the statistical position of cotton figured by The Financial Chronicle:

Will Merge Steamship Lines.

It has now been definitely decided to carry out the big Japanese shipping merger program by establishing the Kokusai Kisen Kaisha, (International Steamship Company,) according to Consul General George H. Scidmore, who is at Yokohama. The plan now decided upon is different in some respects from the original proposal, not the least important of these changes being the fact that no American capital is to be invested in the company. The desire of the promoters to obtain a loan from the Government at a specially low rate of interest was not realized in its entirety, but the financial authorities have agreed to give support to the promoters in a different way.

Punjab Wheat Crop Smaller.

In the final forecast of the wheat crop of the Punjab for the year 1918-19 (ending Sept. 30) issued by the Department of Agriculture, the total yield in the British districts has been estimated at 2,509,191 tons, which is 11 per cent. below the average of the past ten years. The total yield in the native States, according to Consul E. Verne Richardson, at Karachi, is estimated at 276,254 tons. With a view to conserving stocks of food grains, no purchase of wheat for export overseas to destinations other than Mesopotamia are now being authorized.

French Importers Are Listed.

A partial list of importers of agricultural machinery in France can be obtained from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce or its district or co-operative offices by referring to File No. 40485.

5½%
GUARANTEED
Short Term Securities
Under New York State Banking Supervision
An opportunity is here offered for the immediate investment of any money that you may have available, $1.00 to $10,000.00, wherein your principal will be safeguarded under the restrictions of the New York State Banking Law and your principal and earnings guaranteed under the terms of an "Agreement of Guaranty" described below. We recommend our "Ordinary Savings Share" plan paying 4½% per annum compounded quarterly and our 5½% Guaranteed Income Share Certificates
These "Income Share Certificates" are issued in denominations or multiples of $100.00 and have the "early maturity" attractiveness of all other "gilt edge" short term securities so popular with experienced investors throughout the world today. Under the terms of the banking law they may be withdrawn in cash at the option of the holder after three years. Checks for earnings are mailed each six months. They are Tax Exempt in New York
and free from execution or attachment for debt up to the amount of $600.00. These "Income Certificates" represent one of the soundest and most attractive short term investments that are now obtainable.
OUR 30TH YEAR
This Institution is one of the oldest of its kind in this country. It operates conservatively, investing its funds mainly in small amortised mortgage loans to thrifty home builders within the great metropolitan district. The Company is incorporated under the New York State Banking Law (probably the most stringent banking legislation in existence,) and is therein classified as a Savings and Loan Association. It operates under the supervision of the State Banking Department, as do all similar institutions and savings banks in New York State.
Guarantee in Addition to Legal Security
The primary securities which underlie and first protect the issues herein described are limited by the Banking Law, and for each dollar of share liability there must be one dollar of tangible legal assets. The law also provides for the maintenance of a "Reserve" or legal "Guaranty Fund." However, in addition to the above-mentioned legal security, the issues herein referred to are additionally secured and guaranteed under the terms of the "Shareholders' Agreement of Guaranty," the subscribers to which have legally pledged their holdings, representing asset valued at over $500,000.00, to provide the guarantee. Under the terms of the "Guaranty" the certificates herein described are guaranteed both as to principal and dividends of 5½% per annum. Send for Circular H, describing "Guaranteed Income Share Certificates" in detail.
Ordinary Savings Share Plan Paying 4½%
Those desiring the privilege of withdrawing part or all of their money on demand, in the same manner that withdrawals are allowed from Savings Banks, should use our Ordinary Savings Share Plan, paying 4½% per annum, compounded quarterly. As little as $1 starts you and up to $5,000.00 is accepted under this plan, and your savings begin to earn from the first of any month following date of remittance.

CAPITAL WANTED.

AN UNUSUAL BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

We are now allotting Exclusive Territory to Agents for the Lowest-Priced Automobile on the Market. THE SPACKE ROADSTER, A NEW TYPE OF SMALL MOTOR CAR, Combining: Ease of Operation—Light Weight—Economy of Upkeep. List Price, F. O. B. Factory, $295.00. With Detachable Delivery Case, $315.00. Manufactured by THE SPACKE MACHINE & TOOL CO. Factories—Indianapolis, Ind.

SPEED—40 Miles an Hour. GAS—40 to 50 Miles on a Gallon. TIRES—Less Than 1-3 Cost of the Average Small Car. Length Over All, 118 Inches. Weight, Complete, 830 lbs.

The fact that THE SPACKE MACHINE & TOOL CO., who, for the past twenty years have been recognized as one of the leading manufacturers of high-grade motors, transmissions, axles and automotive parts, are putting their name and reputation back of this car, is the best guarantee of its durability.

The SPACKE is not only the lowest-priced automobile on the market, but the most economical to operate. Just think of it:—The man who can keep a car in his back yard can operate a SPACKE for a whole year and cover 10,000 miles at a cost not to exceed $4.00 per week, after allowing 30c. per gallon of gasoline for the maximum of 250 gallons required ($75.00), and have $125.00 for tires, oil and repairs, which is more than enough. It is almost unbelievable, but nevertheless a fact.

FOR QUICK COMMERCIAL DELIVERY the SPACKE has no rival, as it will not only make deliveries quickly and cheaply, but after business hours the owner can, in a few minutes, detach the delivery case, and use it as a pleasure car.

And the SPACKE not only appeals to the man who cannot afford a high-priced car, but also to the "moneyed" man who wants an auxiliary car to take him to and from the railroad station, the golf links or country club.

The SPACKE practically sells itself by reason of its low price, economy of upkeep and beauty of construction.

A SPACKE exclusive agency should show bigger profits on the capital invested than any other legitimate business.

As we are at present appointing agents in the LARGER CITIES ONLY, it will require an investment of $10,000 or more to swing an agency.

If interested write at once, stating what territory you desire, and TO INSURE ATTENTION give particulars as to your present business connections, together with A STATEMENT of your financial standing and BANKING REFERENCES.

CONTROL OF BRITISH FLAX.

Board of Trade Describes Details of Government Plan.

Inquiry having been made in Parliament with respect to the maintenance or assistance of flax production, guarantees given, and the amounts involved, Consul General Skinner at London transmits the following official statement made on behalf of the Board of Trade:

"The Board of Trade has undertaken to purchase from Irish farmers the unsold balance of the 1918 flax crop in Ireland. The purchase will be made at the prices fixed by the Flax (Irish crop) Order, 1918, and the Rescutched Tow No. 2 Order, 1918, and it is estimated that the purchase price will not exceed $2,500,000.

"The Board of Trade has undertaken to purchase from Irish farmers the 1919 flax crop in Ireland. The purchase will be made at the prices fixed by the Flax (Irish crop) Order, 1919, and it is estimated that the purchase price, which is totally dependent on the amount and quality of the crop, will not exceed $25,000,000.

"The Board of Agriculture has contracted with farmers in Great Britain for the production of approximately 13,000 acres of flax in 1919. A reliable estimate of the purchase price of the crop is not yet available.

"The War Department entered into a guaranty of financial co-operation with the Flax Society (Ltd.) in respect of flax production in 1918 and incurred a liability of $1,500,000. The crop produced under the guaranty has not yet been realized for account of the guarantors.

"The Board of Trade has renewed the above guaranty on a reduced scale in respect of flax production in 1919; the nominal liability under the guaranty is limited to $1,000,000, but it is estimated that not more than $250,000 will be called for.

"Following the successful seed production operations conducted in 1918 by the War Department in Canada, the Board of Trade has contracted with Canadian farmers, through the same firm in Winnipeg, on a reduced scale, for the production of 20,000 acres of fibre sowing seed at a purchase price estimated not to exceed $600,000.

IN CZECHOSLOVAKIAN TRADE

What Has to be Done to Deal with the New Republic.

American Consul Wallace J. Young has sent to the Department of Commerce a report from Prague covering import and export restrictions maintained in Czechoslovakia. All imports and exports require a license issued by a Government institution, the Czechoslovak Export and Import Committee, (Ceskoslovenska exportni a importni,) under the Ministry of Commerce, with offices at Prague. This committee is the only body authorized to issue such licenses. It acts in conjunction with several "syndicates," whose members are appointed by the Minister of Commerce. The members of these syndicates may engage in trade, with the permission of the Ministry of Commerce.

So far syndicates for the following commodities have been created: Hops, plate glass, metal-working industry, lumber, applied chemistry, mineral oils, and clothing. Applications have been made for establishing syndicates for liquors, breweries, sugar, paper, fats and oils, millstones, mother-of-pearl, and enameled ware. It is expected that they will soon be authorized by the Minister.

The committee acts upon the recommendation of the syndicates in granting or declining to issue permits. When a syndicate refuses to recommend a license appeal my be taken to the Ministry of Commerce for redress. In those lines for which no syndicates have been named the Export and Import Committee makes the decision independently as to the advisability of issuing the license.

No license is required for the importation into Czechoslovakia for merchandise bought abroad and paid for before the outbreak of the war in 1914, nor for goods manufactured by a branch house of a Czechoslovak concern. But when payment must be made for the goods licenses are necessary.

SCHOOL ON HOSPITAL SHIP.

Navy Offers Special Courses on U. S. S. Mercy to Recruits.

The following announcement was issued yesterday from the Navy Recruiting Station, 34 East Twenty-third Street.

"To help advertise the two-year enlistment and the increased pay, the United States steamship Mercy has agreed to take thirty recruits from the Navy Recruiting Station, Monday, rate them hospital apprentices, second class, at $35.90 a month and expenses, and train them for hospital duties, offering the ambitious young men the opportunity to obtain a commission as chief pharmacist.

"These apprentices will be brought into close association with the eleven medical officers on the Mercy and will thus be enabled to learn much in their profession.

"Special schools will be established on the Mercy for the instruction of the Hospital Corps men, where the apprentices will receive, free of charge, a thorough elementary course of instruction in emergency surgery, anatomy, first aid, pharmacy, chemistry, and compounding of medicines, hygiene, care of the sick, surgical procedures, &c. Those who show special ability may avail themselves of courses in elementary bacteriology and other laboratory examinations and tests, x-ray, &c.

"This is the first time the Navy has opened its doors so that young men could be schooled afloat in medicine and surgery. Heretofore, men enlisting for hospital apprentices were sent for a six months' course to a hospital training school either at Newport, R. I.; Norfolk, Va.; Great Lakes, Ill., or San Francisco.

"The Mercy sails Tuesday, for Norfolk, then New London, Conn., and Newport, R. I., after which she will go to the Navy Yard for overhaul before joining the Atlantic fleet.

Every State in this United States, every province in Canada, the Philippines, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Canal Zone will be represented among the 300 delegates who will attend the convention.

TO FIGHT HOUSING ADDICTS AT PELHAM

City Island Residents to Hold Meeting Tomorrow Protesting Dr. Copeland's Plan.

EXPLAINS LAW ON DRUGS

Head Revenue Agent Defines Rights of Physicians in Prescribing Drugs.

A meeting of business men and residents of City Island will be held tomorrow night at Thwaite's Community Hall it was announced last night, to protest against the plan of the Health Department of this city to install a colony of drug addicts in unused barracks at the Pelham Bay Naval Station. John Kadel, a lawyer, of 372 East Forty-ninth Street, said that he had been retained by property owners and residents in neighborhoods adjoining the barracks.

He asserted that residents all over Westchester County were incensed over the Health Commissioner's proposal. Mr. Kadel said that the Health Commissioner's plans, as announced, did not call for commitment of drug addicts by court order, but provided for housing addicts who went there voluntarily. He said that such addicts would be under no legal restraint and that their presence under no restriction would be a menace to the community in that section.

A. R. Parkhurst, Director of the Bureau of Narcotic Research, made public yesterday a letter from Major Daniel R. Porter, Supervising International Revenue Department Agent of the New York District, on the rights of physicians to supply drugs to bona fide patients under the Harrison law. Mr. Parkhurst said that many druggists and physicians had been so frightened by the law in its uninterpreted state that they did not know what acts might be legal and what might be criminal, and consequently decided to stay on the safe side by furnishing no drugs at all, regardless of the need of patients. In his letter, Major Porter said:

"Treasury Decision No. 2879 does not lay down any rule. It simply revokes a previous ruling which was not in harmony with the law as construed by the Supreme Court. This leaves the right of physicians to be determined by the law. No officer has any authority to construe the law, that being a function of the courts. Any opinion by an official as to what the law permits or forbids would not protect a physician acting under it. Physicians are bound to know the law and construe it at their own risk.

"The Harrison Narcotic Law, as construed by the courts, gives a physician no authority to prescribe a narcotic drug for the purpose of satisfying an addict's appetite for the drug, nor is a druggist authorized to dispense a narcotic under such conditions to an addict. Narcotic drugs can only be dispensed in the course of a physician's professional practice to a bona fide patient, and for legitimate medical uses.

"In case an addict is actually suffering from a proven incurable disease, in the treatment of which a narcotic drug is necessary to alleviate pain caused by said incurable disease, and not merely the result of a craving for the drug, it may be dispensed upon prescription duly written by a reputable physician, where such prescriptions have the endorsement of the physician to the effect that the drug is to be dispensed to such patient in the treatment of an incurable disease.

"This office manifestly is not charged with the duty of laying down any fixed rule as to the frequency of the prescriptions in the cases of such incurables. That responsibility obviously rests upon the physician in charge. If he acts unprofessionally, it is to be expected that the courts will hold him to a strict accountability. The danger of supplying a patient suffering from cancer or other similar chronic disease with a supply of narcotics should not be overlooked, because such patients are ordinarily addicts also, and if their actions are not carefully supervised, or controlled they may use the narcotics wrongfully, either by taking excessive quantities themselves or by disposing of or selling any surplus amount of the drugs in their hands to other addicts or persons not lawfully entitled to receive same.

"No State law or regulation can protect a physician in doing anything contrary to the Federal law.

QUIT CANADIAN CABINET.

Ministers of Finance and Agriculture Resign—Other Changes.

OTTAWA, Can., Aug. 2.—The resignation of Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance in the Dominion Cabinet was announced today. He will be succeeded by Sir Henry Drayton, who has been chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Poor health and a desire to attend to his private business, which he said the pressure of public duties has caused him wholly to neglect, were the reasons given by Sir Thomas White for his withdrawal from the Cabinet.

In his letter of resignation to Premier Borden, dated July 7, and made public today, the retiring Minister called attention to the fact that he desired to be relieved of his duties last November on the eve of the Premier's departure for England, but consented to remain and discharge the duties of acting Prime Minister, with the understanding that his resignation would be accepted when the Premier returned.

Sir Thomas explained further that he leaves office on terms of highest accord with his colleagues. The Prime Minister, in his reply, paid a high tribute to the Finance Minister's able discharge of his duties, and voiced the regret of the Cabinet at his departure.

The resignation of T. A. Creerar as Minister of Agriculture also was announced today. His place will be taken by Dr. Simon Fraser Tolmie.

F. B. Carvell has retired as Minister of Public Works to take the place of Sir Henry Drayton as chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners. His successor has not been appointed.

Traffic Squad Outing Today.

The tenth annual outing of the Traffic Squad Benevolent Association will be held today at Witzell's Grove, College Point, L. I. A special steamer will leave North River at Twenty-third Street at 9 A. M., and breakfast will be served at the grove. The day will be devoted to recreations of all kinds, with games between the members of the department. Members of the Fifth Avenue Association and the Merchants' Association are expected to be present.

Argentine Credit to Allies.

The President of Argentina has sent a message to Congress, according to advices from Buenos Aires, urging that immediate consent be given to the Government's project for the granting of the credit of $200,000,000 gold to Great Britain, France, and Italy for the purchase of Argentine products, which the Senate rejected in the last session and which the Executive presented again at the opening of the present session.

Rhine Wines Come High.

Reports from Rhenish Hesse found in the Berlin papers tell of extraordinarily high prices being paid by dealers for last year's wine output. In lots of 1,200 liters (a liter approximates a quart) white Rhine wines of the usual brands bring from 5 to 10 marks per liter, while some of the better qualities fetch as much as 20 marks. At normal exchange a mark equals 23.8 cents, but at the present rate is about 7 cents.

DYE-LICENSE PLAN IS LOSING FAVOR

Textile Men Now Are Turning Toward the Tariff Idea of Protection.

From the view that it was their patriotic duty to promote the interests of the American dye industry to the extent of permitting a Government board to say just which foreign dyes, and in what amounts, could come into this country, textile manufacturers and other users of colorstuffs have passed to a serious questioning of whether their own interests would be best served by such an expedient. When the question of protective regulation of dyestuff imports, as contained in the Longworth bill, first came up, a vote taken immediately would very likely have resulted in a quick passage of the import licensing measure. Now the tendency, while it is not distinctly opposed to erecting a "Chinese wall" against foreign dyes, is toward studying what the proposed dyestuff legislation may be expected to accomplish. For this purpose an important meeting of the woolen and worsted manufacturers will be held on Tuesday of this week.

Among the silk and woolen manufacturers, who are less concerned over the proposal of the dyestuff makers than the cotton cloth producers—by whom the need of foreign colors is more badly felt, sentiment is veering around to protection from a high tariff rate rather than from import regulation. Opposition to the licensing plan may be treated under two classifications, namely, that which is frankly against such legislation and that which is somewhat skeptical of the composition of the proposed board to control imports.

Does Not Provide for Appeals.

Those who do not regard the licensing proposal favorably draw attention to the fact that no provision is contained in the bill for an appeal from the board's decision. Thus, in case a request made for the importation of certain dyes is overruled, the manufacturer, no matter how urgently he may need these particular colors and how much his business may be injured by the board's refusal to allow him to get them, has no place to lodge an appeal.

The Government control feature is another point that comes in for criticism. Although the licensing board would be composed of representatives of the dye producers and the users of their materials, it is pointed out that, nevertheless, the licensing commission will derive its authority from the Government, and that the Chairman of the board, in fact, will be appointed by the President. The various interests concerned in one way or another with the question were willing advocates of Government control during the war, when conditions warranted such control, but now the question is asked if there is to be Government regulation of trade in peace times in one line, what is to prevent its spread to other industries. The woolen manufacturer, for instance, is asking if dye imports are to be regulated to fit the desires of the American dye producers, what is to prevent the wool growers from demanding a similar privilege.

Competitors May Get Better Dyes.

So far the point of chief concern to domestic fabric manufacturers, and to the cotton representatives particularly, is how they will fare in trade if their foreign competitors are permitted to get better dyes from other sources, while they are restricted to domestic dyes that may prove inferior in certain respects. Reports are already heard in the silk trade, for instance, that if the manufacturers of silk-and-cotton goods are forced to compete with manufacturers using a better grade of dyes they will discontinue the production of these fabrics and confine their efforts entirely to all-silk goods. This, it is pointed out, would prove an upsetting factor for the entire trade, as the competition furnished in this way to the present makers of all-silk goods would throw the market out of balance and make the future of the entire trade very unsettled.

In the woolen trade the producers of fine quality goods are similarly concerned over the prospects of competition with foreign manufacturers having ready access to dyes of superior grade to those obtainable in this country. While the patriotism of such men is unquestioned, and they would return to German dyes with no small feeling of regret, it is merely a question with them of business vision. In short, they are wondering whether it is more practical patriotism to make the best goods possible and sell them to the world than to protect the American dye industry at the cost of all the progress they have made and all that the future holds for them. They appear perfectly willing to see the domestic industry protected with a tariff rate that will give the American dye producer every chance to develop his opportunities.

Dislike Composition of Board.

In the composition of the licensing board the dye consumers see some grave reasons for thought and study. One silk manufacturer frankly stated that to him the board looked "autocratic" to the last degree. On one side he sees arrayed five members representing the dye interests, on the other representatives drawn from a scattered number of industries. A Chairman appointed by the President, he believes, would prove to be one in sympathy with the efforts and purposes of the American dye makers.

The silk man in question drew attention to what may be expected from the operation of a board with the personnel described. He said it would be natural enough for the dye representatives to present a united front on questions the board was called upon to decide. A disagreement in a committee meeting, he explained, would be overcome in a general meeting of the board, all the members voting for the majority opinion reached in the committee session. On the other hand, the scattered representation of the dye consumers would not lend itself to strength, and it might be expected that the important demands of one industry might not strike another industry as so important. Meanwhile, in case of deadlock between the two parties, the Chairman's vote would alone lead to decision. To find a man capable of preserving an open mind under the pressure of such interests this manufacturer pointed out would be, perhaps, the most difficult undertaking before the legislators now investigating the matter. If his name is submitted by the present sympathizers with the American dye interests there would be all the more question, he explained, of the dye consumers expecting to get unprejudiced decisions.

Another point raised by those who have studied the possible results of the licensing plan is the power for discrimination which might be exercised by the representatives on the licensing commission. The question is raised whether the small manufacturer, for instance, would enjoy the same chance to get needed dyes as his more powerful competitor. Where there was only a small amount of dyestuffs involved it is asked, would not the tendency of the board be to waive such a request in view of larger undertakings? This, it was pointed out by a student of organization work, is one of the most frequent occurrences in committee work.

Might Buy Cotton Machinery.

There are apparently good opportunities for the sale of cotton spindles and looms in the city of Kao Yang, thirty miles from Pau Ting-fu, China, says a Commerce Report, as the textile business of this place is estimated at over $12,000,000 a year. Cotton is shipped hence to Japan, where it is spun into yarn, and returned for use in thousands of hand looms. As the city is wealthy and wages are fairly high, local authorities think that cotton-mill machinery could be introduced without difficulty.

SUGGESTS NEW TRADE PLAN.

Ex-Army Man Outlines Way of Meeting Foreign Prejudice.

THE TIMES has received from John Siggelkow, late Renting, Requisition, and Claims Officer, American Expeditionary Force, a letter suggesting a new way for American manufacturers to make use of the Webb act for the expansion of export trade. This plan is based, he says, upon a close observation of conditions in France, upon an acquaintance with a number of American manufacturers, and upon a study of trade tendencies in this country. The letter follows:

"Many American manufacturers today hesitate to engage in international business through the building up of an export organization of their own, feeling that the business derived would not warrant the expense of developing such an organization. This is a valid reason for nonexpansion in the case of many manufacturers with limited capital and a small product, and in lines in which there is, in this country itself, considerable competition.

"If there were no possibility for combination for export trade, these manufacturers would engage in it only to a very limited extent; probably never doing more than filling the spasmodic orders of an export commission house. But because there is this possibility of combination for international business the entire situation is changed.

"Large organizations of American manufacturers in competing lines, and other organizations of manufacturers in noncompeting but kindred lines could be developed, in due time, to be powerful factors in international business.

"But this idea of combination for export suggests the declaration of a business war on the rest of the world—the old German idea, in fact. Our allies have not been slow to see this, and it has been the cause of a considerable amount of adverse comment. This comment would be justified were it not for the further fact that the old German idea of world domination is utterly foreign to the average American manufacturer.

"A rational method for the conduct of this business would be the formation of a sales corporation in each country in which business was done by each large combination of manufacturers. This sales corporation would be free to manufacture locally, to operate assembly plants, or to install its products in homes or factories, when and where these were found to be economically advantageous. A just sharing of the profits of this corporation, through a wide distribution of its securities in the country which it served, would secure the active interest of the citizens of that country and would go far to prove to them that our use of the Webb act was not to be merely as a weapon, but as an instrument for promoting the closest possible trade co-operation between this and other countries.

"The American manufacturers are today in a very strong position. Their prestige abroad is high. Their reputation for efficiency through quantity production, for fair dealing, and for successful management is a reputation of which they may well be proud. And when they go into active partnership with the business man abroad they will not only greatly increase their profits and stabilize their business, but they will also make one of the most valuable contributions to the cause of the world's peace."

RAW SILKS LESS STEADY.

Japanese Varieties Decline as American Buyers Withdraw.

The activity in the Japanese raw silk market has diminished, and buyers, owing to large stocks in the American market, have almost entirely withdrawn their support. In consequence prices have eased off considerably, Sinshiu No 1 now being quoted at 2,250 yen. Visible stock at Yokohama is estimated at about 15,000 bales, according to A. P. Villa & Bros., Inc.

Canton is firm. While prices there have not advanced in the last week, reelers, having sold ahead for quite a few months, are not willing to make any concessions for the present.

In Shanghai the price tendency is still upward for all grades of silks, and the market is higher for steam filatures and tsatlees. Tussahs are unchanged, but it is estimated that only about 1,000 bales will be available until the new crop makes its appearance late in the year.

Milan is considerably firmer again on account of large buying, mostly by American importers. Extra classica's for single weaving are now being quoted at 185 lire, against 181 a week ago.

In the local market business is fairly active, and manufacturers are well covered with orders. The outlook continues good, and the slight recession in Japanese prices has had no bad effect so far.

FRENCH DUTIES ADVANCE.

Higher Rates Charged Now on Foreign Shoes and Leather.

Under the decree repealing the ad valorem surtaxes on goods imported into France and establishing co-efficients for increasing the specific duties, the co-efficients for boots, shoes, and leather have been announced as follows: Item 476, hides and skins, merely tanned or tawed, 1.8; curried, calfskins, 1.8; goat and kid skins, &c., 2.2; cow and other hides, 2.6; trimmed for fine saddlery, &c., 2.5; sheepskins prepared in Europe, &c., 2.6; patent leather, 3; chamois, dressed, &c., 3; Hungarian leather, &c., 1.4. Item 480, topboots, 1.8. Item 481, high shoes, 2.3. Item 482, low shoes, 2.3. Item 483, children's footwear, 2.9.

The rate of duty on leather topboots with soles sewed on, from the United States, was 58 cents per pair. With the increase of 80 per cent., it will now be $1.04 per pair. On high shoes of leather the rate was also 58 cents per pair. With the increase of 130 per cent. it is now $1.33. On low shoes of leather the rate was 29 cents per pair. With the increase of 130 per cent. it is now 67 cents. On children's leather shoes it was 14 cents per pair. With the increase of 150 per cent. it is now 41 cents. Commercial Attaché C. D. Snow, Paris, supplied the foregoing figures to the Department of Commerce.

Fashion Show Is Revived.

In answer to a number of requests that their usual fashion show be put on this year, Sidney Blumenthal & Co., Inc., have decided to hold one on Aug. 20 to 22, inclusive, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. The show was not given last year, owing to the war. The exhibit of fashions will be limited to 200 garments, most of which will be entered in competition. Blue ribbons will be awarded to manufacturers displaying the best examples in each class. The prize garments will be selected by an independent committee of judges that will consist of fashion experts from leading trade and consumer publications and buyers of cloaks and suits from the larger department stores.

Will Visit the Dress Centres.

David N. Mosessohn, Executive Director of the Associated Dress Industries of America, will leave tomorrow for a tour through the most important cities of the country where women's, misses', and children's dresses are made, with a view to consulting manufacturers on important matters which are being planned by the association affecting the new conditions in the industry. Mr. Mosessohn will make Chicago his first stop, and will then visit Milwaukee, St. Paul, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, Kansas City, and other dress manufacturing centres. He will be gone for about three weeks.

Gray Goods Sales Lacking.

Sales of importance were lacking in the local gray goods market yesterday, and the desks of several leading factors were shut before the usual Saturday closing time. The market, however, has assumed a firmer tone under the influence of the bullish Government cotton crop condition report, and second hands have either tightened up prices on their holdings or withdrawn them for the time being.

SAYS FALL PRICES MIGHT BE HIGHER

Prominent Garment Buyer Makes Few Complaints—Describes Fall Lines.

"So many rumors have been current about higher prices for women's garments that I was rather surprised to find so little difference from the prices of last Fall," said a prominent retail ready-to-wear buyer yesterday. "While business has been good with us, and the tendency of consumer demand has been toward better merchandise, I came here prepared to be not only very discriminating in my selections, but to buy only about as much in money value as I did a year ago.

"I bought more, however, than I had planned, because prices were not so high as I was led to believe, and because the styles were attractive and the materials good. The coatings were especially novel; and so wonderfully attractive that I have confidence in their ready distribution.

"Some of the fashion leaders among the retailers, I understand, got into the market as soon as the new lines were ready and ordered greater quantities in June than they are accustomed to order in July. This early buying was said to have been done in order that they might feel assured of getting the right materials, as well as complete deliveries. However, early orders were the exception, rather than the rule.

"Even in such an unusual season as the present one it requires a good deal of nerve to order any considerable quantity of high-class merchandise, that is, garments to retail at from $150 to $500. A buyer has to be considerably above the average to commit himself early and heavily. Yet, it is because of unusual conditions that some of the foremost buyers committed themselves earlier than usual, and that their quantity orders were fully up to normal.

Fewer Low-Priced Models Taken.

"Buyers of less expensive merchandise, things which wholesale from $28 to $110, have not bought as heavily as usual in dollars and cents. From what some of them have told me, and from other reports, I should say at a rough guess that many buyers of moderate-priced merchandise have spent about 20 per cent. less money in the market than they did a year ago. They bought better merchandise, however, for where they used to begin at $20 or below that figure, this year they began at $28, with more orders placed on $37.50 and $45 merchandise than on the lower-priced goods.

"Now if, as they say, they paid more and bought better merchandise, I cannot figure out why under the sun they did not buy as much as they did last year. One thing is certain—they will be back in the market by the middle of September wanting something more. But where are they going to get it? Unless all signs fail, their return trip will be no picnic.

"Last Fall some buyers took a chance in not ordering a sufficient quantity of suits, because they knew that there were good-sized stocks of dress goods on hand. They felt that if they held off there would come a break in prices of the finished merchandise. They were right; it came. But this year it looks as though garment deliveries may be seriously delayed because of the slowness in delivery of goods by the mills. It seems to me that if buyers have gone home expecting to get what they want at a lower price a month from now they are liable to be sorely disappointed.

"Shoppers" May Be Hit Hard.

"If these buyers have been shopping around the market, 'hooking up,' with firms different from those they have been accustomed to deal with, they are much to be pitied. But they won't get pity from their merchandise men, you can depend upon that. If they have bought from their regular wholesale houses they may be able to get some more merchandise later on. That will depend largely upon their standing with their sources of supply.

"I have heard several buyers complain recently that garment manufacturers were not allowing claims on goods, and that it was getting more and more difficult to return merchandise. I cannot understand that, for where a claim was just I have never had one turned down. But there are buyers, or rather stores, that have by no means enviable reputations for returns.

"One of the most attractive features of the new fashions is the fine materials used. Satin leads in moderate-priced dresses, but in the better afternoon dress tricolettes, satin and crêpe brocades, duvetyns, and tricolette combined either with duvetyn or wool jersey, are most prominent. For general street wear dark blue tricotine, attractively embroidered with jet beads, is favored.

"Various shades of brown, dark blue, taupe, a little burgundy and black are good colors for afternoon dresses and for coats. Jade, coral, poppy red, and orchid are the fashionable colors for evening. Pastel shades in taffeta and net are good in dance dresses for the younger set. Metal, artificial silk, and genuine silk brocades are favored for evening and dinner gowns.

Expensive Suits Fur Trimmed.

"Wraps are made of chiffon velvet, fur, and metal brocades heavily fur trimmed. High-priced tailored suits are also elaborately trimmed with fur. Never has there been a greater use of fur in various forms.

"There is not much change in the shape of coats, but what they lack in that respect they make up in the luxuriousness and novelty of the fabrics used. The favored materials are all soft, and hang in graceful folds.

"Street and afternoon dresses will be good early in the season, and afternoon, dinner, and evening gowns later on. Only a few houses have shown velveteen dresses, but those who have made them up have done a good business on them. Tricotine and velveteen are excellent materials for the first cool days of Autumn. Worn with a fur neckpiece, they will be very smart.

"While the general tendency is strongly toward colors, the smartly dressed women will have at least one handsome black gown. It may be of duvetyn, of one of the satin and wool materials, or even of satin brocade, but it will be a black costume completed by a black hat."

Must Register in France.

A bill has been adopted by the French Chamber of Deputies and the Senate requiring all commercial travelers in French territory to be in possession of registration cards. These cards, renewable every year, must show the profession, name, date and place of birth, nationality and domicile of the bearer, and must also bear a photograph. Papers must be produced in support of the application, together with a written statement by the traveler's firm, viséd by the Chamber of Commerce as regards French firms; and in the case of foreign firms with no branch in France by the French Consul in the town where the head office is established. Registration cards are delivered by the French Consul in the case of foreign firms. A delay of three months from the date of the promulgation of the present bill is granted to all commercial travelers in French territory in order to conform to these regulations.

Wants More Trade Journals.

The American Consul at Nairobi, British East Africa, reports that a number of American trade journals are received regularly at that consulate for reference, but he adds that a number of other American trade journals are desired.

FOR FILING DAMAGE CLAIMS.

Waist League Director Has Prepared Several Suggestions.

A carefully-prepared "hanger" giving detailed information on how to file express claims has just been prepared by Executive Director M. Mosessohn of the United Waist League of America. Mr. Mosessohn arranged it with the assistance of officials of various express companies. He feels confident that it will be the means of eliminating a great deal of unnecessary effort on the part of the manufacturer, as well as acting as a guide in collecting money due from the express companies and in filing claims for loss or damage done to merchandise in transit. The following are the instructions given:

"Claims must be filed with the express company within four months after a reasonable time for delivery has elapsed.

"Suits for loss, damage, or failure to make delivery must be instituted within two years and one day after a reasonable time for delivery has elapsed.

"File claims for complete loss of shipment with C. L. Dallery, Correspondent, American Railway Express, Tenth Avenue and Thirty-third Street. File claims for shortage or damage and claims for delay with W. E. Fogarty, Claim Agent, 250 West Twenty-sixth Street, New York City.

"Support complete loss claims by the following papers: Receipt, descriptive invoice, showing style, number, color, and material, and copy of consignee's letter of complaint of non-delivery.

"Support shortage or damage claims by these papers: Duplicate invoice for entire shipment, invoice against express company for the part short or damaged, and evidence showing that shortage or damage was verified by representatives of express company.

"Affidavit from shipper and consignee should be furnished in shortage claims.

"If, through the efforts of the league you receive payment of claims directly from the express company, please notify us to that effect so that we may close our files on the claims and thus avoid unnecessary correspondence."

BUYING FUR HATS EARLY.

Retailers Are Already Stocking Up on Winter Models.

With the temperature what it has been for the last few days it seems somewhat inconsistent, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America, to talk of fur hats, but inasmuch as they are already being shown and sold for Winter wear the inconsistency is somewhat abridged.

"As the situation was explained to us," the bulletin goes on, "the reason the manufacturer is making much of his goods this early is that buyers may effect a great saving by buying so much in advance. It has been found that a number of buyers throughout the country are very desirous of taking advantage of this opportunity.

"According to what one manufacturer had to say on the subject, the short-haired furs will be used almost exclusively for hats and trimmings. The reason for this, obviously, is that these furs are rather flattering, while the long-haired furs are very trying. Of course, the number of styles is very limited and confines itself almost entirely to the turban and the tam. One feature shape is a small cuff-brim tricorne which can be worn with the long side to the front, thus giving a parallel side effect. It can also be worn with one of the short sides to the front, thereby giving the effect of one long and one short side, or else with the long side to the back.

SHOULD GIVE REAL VALUES.

Otherwise Parcel-Post Shipments Carry Higher Duties.

American firms making shipments to Uruguay by parcel post are urged by Consul William Dawson, Montevideo, to bear in mind that in the case of goods for which no official valuation is found in the customs tariff the import duty, which, with surtaxes, usually amounts to at least 45 per cent., is as a rule assessed on the sender's declaration of value. The declaration of a higher than the actual value, sometimes made in the belief that it insures more careful handling of the parcel, is an error which can only work to the disadvantage of the receiver.

Mr. Dawson says that local importers not infrequently experience difficulty from the fact that American goods arrive by parcel post in packages which bear the retail selling price in the United States. All such price indications should be removed, inasmuch as it is difficult to convince Customs Inspectors that this is not the price paid by the importer. The declaration of value should show the net export price paid by the customer after deduction of all discounts, and this should be the only price or value appearing on the shipment. It is not easy to make appraisers admit discounts in determining value.

Urges Proper Use of "Bohemia."

Letters intended for Czechoslovakia should not be addressed "Bohemia." Consul Wallace J. Young at Prague also calls attention to the point that in the body of the letters when the whole country is intended to be mentioned its proper name should be used. The former "Bohemia" is but one of the parts of the present country, and when an American firm speaks, for example, of wanting agencies in "Bohemia," without a knowledge of such a firm's previous connections in the former "crown lands" now comprised within this State, it is impossible to tell whether the firm is desirous of securing new agencies in Bohemia only or throughout the entire Czechoslovakia.

Argentina Makes Own Handbags.

The local manufacture of purses, wallets, handbags, and similar articles of leather and silk has assumed noticeable proportions, reports Consul General W. Henry Robertson from Buenos Aires, Argentina. Several downtown shops have opened for the exclusive sale of these goods, and all of the department stores and the better jewelry stores are featuring them. One of the three large firms manufacturing this class of goods claims to be exporting quantities of its product to Brazil and other South American countries.

Chile a Market for Clothing.

Consul Arnold A. McKay, at Antofagasta, reports that there should be a market ins northern Chile for the sale of men's ready-made clothing of the inexpensive, washable kind. Suits made of cool cloth material and to retail there for about $20 should be most salable. While in central and southern Chile two-piece hot-weather suits are little worn, in the northern part within the last few years there has been an increasing demand for such clothing. Suits made of cassimere, mohair, and more expensive cloths would not find ready sale.

Dental Gold by Parcel Post.

Dental gold may be accepted in packages for dispatch by parcel post to Uruguay. If dental gold is transmitted in the regular mails to Uruguay it is subject to confiscation and returned to origin from that country if it reaches there as an inclosure in printed matter or marked as a sample of merchandise. Section 152, on Page 132, and Item "Uruguay," on Page 152 of the Annual Postal Guide for 1918, is modified accordingly.

Popular-Priced Goods on Show.

Many new items will be included in the lines displayed by manufacturers at the Merchandise and Toy Exhibition that begins tomorrow at the Hotel Commodore and will be continued until Friday night. It is expected that 5,000 merchants and buyers from all parts of the United States and Canada will attend. Manufacturers catering to the export trade will have interpreters on hand for the benefit of foreign buyers.

OUR PATENT LAWS MAY BE CHANGED

Among Revisions Suggested Is the Establishment of an Appeals Court.

Considerable interest is being shown at the present time in commercial circles in the report of the committee appointed by the National Research Council to look into the advisability of reforming the American patent system. The most important of the proposals contained in the report is that suggesting the establishment of a Court of Patent Appeals, and a bill has been drafted on this subject for presentation to Congress. Its passage is likely to have a marked effect in the future on litigation growing out of disputes over patents covering machinery and other devices of value to the business world.

The committee which drew up the report is composed of several well-known inventors and patent experts. The Chairman of the committee is Dr. William F. Durand, with whom are associated Dr. Leo H. Baekeland, inventor of Bakelite; Professor Michael Pupin, the electrical inventor; Colonel R. A. Millikan, Ex-Commissioner of Patents Thomas Ewing, and Messrs. Frederick P. Fish and Edward J. Prindle, patent attorneys.

This is not the first attempt that has been made to establish a Court of Patent Appeals in this country, according to Lawrence Langner, an international patent attorney of this city. Earlier attempts in this direction, however, were said yesterday by Mr. Langner to have met with considerable opposition.

"Those who advocate the establishment of a Court of Patent Appeals at Washington," Mr. Langner went on, "point out that under the present system it is possible to multiply patent litigation to such an extent that it can be made highly vexatious. In fact, there seems to be no question that at least five or more of our Federal Courts can be called upon to decide the validity of a patent before the suit is ultimately decided.

"Thus, by starting patent suits in different circuits, it can easily happen that the Court of Appeals in one district will decide the question differently from a similar court in another district. It is then usual to bring the matter before the Supreme Court of the United States so that any person wishing to do so can involve another party in the most expensive kind of litigation.

"Not long ago I came across a case of this kind in which two decisions in the Federal courts at Cincinnati were given against the patent, while the Court of Appeals in New York upheld it. The case is now being argued before the Supreme Court at Washington. The expenses of this litigation have far exceeded the profits made by the patentee upon the invention, but both contestants see the possibility of a final decision being made in their favor. The proposed remedy for cases of this kind is to have a single Court of Patent Appeals in Washington, to which all appeals from every Federal District Court of the United States would be tried by Judges who are more or less experienced in patent matters.

"One of the objections raised heretofore to the establishment of a Court of Patent Appeals is that Judges who decide nothing but patent cases tend to become so technically experienced that they find it hard to appreciate how difficult it is to cross the barrier between expert knowledge and actual invention. Under the present plan, however, it is not proposed that the Court of Patent Appeals shall consist of Judges who devote their time exclusively to patent matters. If the suggested court is established the Judges are to be called from the various circuits to serve for a given period, so that they will not tend to become too narrow in their views.

"Supporters of the plan believe that one advantage of a Court of Patent Appeals would be the elimination of patent suits before the Court of Appeals in the districts of the United States where patent litigation seldom comes before the Judges. The Judges of those circuits are often entirely ignorant of the underlying principles of our patent laws, and their decisions are such that the unsuccessful litigant is usually not inclined to accept them.

"An example of this is found in the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upholding the patent owned by Mineral Separations that covers the separation of copper from its ore. The Australian patent corresponding to this patent, valued at millions of dollars, was litigated before five courts in England and Australia, and a patentable invention was found to be present. The American patent was litigated in Montana, and the Court of Appeals of that district, having little experience in such matters, decided against the patent. On the successful motion of William H. Kenyon, however, the matter was brought before the Supreme Court, which heard an appeal and reversed the decision."

HAS ITALIAN TRADE RULES.

Commerce Bureau Issues Report on Import Restrictions.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has received information through what are regarded as reliable sources that the following program is to be followed in connection with the Italian restrictions upon importation:

Certain articles will be admitted only under Government control, such as tea, sugar, coffee, tobacco, matches, petroleum and its products, cereals, tinned meats, condensed milk, and incandescent lamps. It will be observed that this list includes articles for which Government monopolies have been established or are proposed or which are already subject to special control.

Certain articles will require special Treasury import license. This list will include such articles as chocolate, medicines, perfumery, cotton, woolen, and silk textiles, copper sulphate, cordage, saddlery, all leather goods except shoes, partly manufactured iron and steel products, railway material, agricultural machinery, glass manufactures, finished cinematograph films, pianos, and automobiles. In this list are included certain articles of luxury, for which import licenses have been required since early in the war, and certain other articles, for which it is apparently the intention to develop the domestic manufacture.

All articles not enumerated in the above fairly comprehensive lists are to be admitted freely subject only to the usual tariff regulations. This will open the Italian markets to such American products as shoes, rubber goods, hardware, machine tools, paper, fertilizers, various chemicals, and machinery for industrial plants. It is to be observed that these lists are not official and may be subject to revision.

Greece After Marine Engines.

There is a large demand in Greece, according to Trade Commissioner Eliot G. Mears at Athens, for marine engines of from 50 to 200 horse power. The effort is principally to take advantage of the high shipping rates now prevailing, and in order to do this not only the new ships, but also the old sailing vessels, are being supplied with auxiliary motors, in order to decrease the delay due to light winds or calms and the time required for coming into port. The kind of engines most in demand are oil motors of the Diesel type. The two main considerations are simplicity of construction and operation and economy of fuel consumption.

Algiers Getting American Goods.

Since April 1 five American vessels, three steamships and two schooners, have brought cargoes to Algiers from the United States, according to Consul A. C. Frost. Three of these vessels left port in ballast and a fourth light, owing to the lack of available return cargo. The fifth took a load of cement for Casablanca. The inward cargoes comprised refined petroleum, tobacco, stave wood, cottonseed oil and other food products, binder twine, and agricultural and other machinery.

PICTURES BEST FOR MEXICO.

Natives There Use Them to Identify Goods They Want.

While many articles exported to Mexico bear some sort of an illustrated trade mark, many do not, and of those which do a good percentage are not simple or outstanding enough. Retail merchants of Chihuahua, reports Consul J. S. Stewart, state that their customers invariably ask for the "rose" brand or the "deer" mark, for instance, whether they are calling for canned goods, a penknife, a plow, or a piece of muslin. Using the words "Our Beauty" or a trade mark not easily remembered or called is a poor substitute for the picture of an "Indian" or "Steamboat." The poor, illiterate class of Mexicans call for an article by "picture," and for this reason, also, firms advertising their wares and using posters and signs would do well to illustrate their advertisements with a picture or an easily remembered mark, thus enabling the buyer to readily identify their products. In the United States the consumer asks for "Smith's bacon" or "Jones's saw," but in Mexico he wants "Donkey" brand soap or "Star" brand hatchets.

"The color of an established article," says Mr. Stewart, "should not be changed unless absolutely unavoidable. If a certain plow is painted green, the wheels of a wagon yellow, the retail merchant is sure to experience difficulty in selling an old customer the same plow and wagon if the color of the plow and that of the wheels are changed. An American manufacturer did actually at one time make the mistake of changing the color of the wheels of his high-grade farm wagon, and the farmer was not easily convinced that the red wheels were 'as good as' the yellow ones of his former wagons. Needless to say the complaints were many, and the old color continued after a short, costly interruption."

HELPS SERBIAN MERCHANTS

Government Provides Fund to Settle Defaulted Accounts.

To encourage trade, and in view of the present inability of many Serbian merchants to offer security acceptable to foreign merchants, the Serbian Government has decided to appropriate 50,000,000 francs to secure payment by merchants, properly qualified, in case of their default, according to the American Consul at Belgrade. To secure this guarantee it will be necessary to make proper arrangements in each specific case. Merchants, in the usual course, will offer bills of exchange indorsed by the (Government) National Bank, mortgages on Belgrade real estate, Serbian bank notes deposited as security in the national bank, and notes based upon war indemnities expected to be received by the makers.

"All merchants," says the Consul, "would undoubtedly expect credit, say six or eight months. One of the principal difficulties to be overcome is that of exchange, which for both the currencies in use—Austrian crowns and Serbian dinars—is constantly fluctuating. This question is one of capital importance for the whole kingdom, and is having the serious consideration of the Government. American commercial transactions will, however, be greatly facilitated if the American-Jugoslav National Bank, the establishment of which I understand is now being actively considered by certain American and Belgrade bankers, comes into existence, of which there are, apparently, good prospects. In this case the bank will make a specialty of providing credit and security for merchants of good standing, but temporarily embarrassed by the present conditions following the war and the generally upset situation in Serbia. The bank in question would be American and under American national banking laws."

STATE LINES FACE LOSS.

Deficit on English Wires for Fiscal Year to be Large.

In view of the possible nationalization of British coal mines, says Trade Commissioner H. G. Brock, London, the commercial accounts of public utility enterprises run by the State are rousing general interest. The official figures for the telegraph and telephone services of the United Kingdom show a deficiency of $2,781,650 in respect of telegraphs and a surplus of $1,777,340 in respect of telephones for the year 1917-18.

The accounts for 1918-19 are much less favorable, however, owing to the largely increased war bonus paid to the staffs, amounting in the telegraph service to $6,250,000 and the telephone $7,500,000, the loss on the two services being officially computed at $5,000,000 on telegraphs and $2,000,000 on telephones.

For 1919-20 the loss will be substantially larger, the war bonus for the telegraph service being estimated at over $10,000,000 and for the telephone at $12,500,000. These balances have been arrived at after providing interest on the capital value of the plant and buildings, provisional liability, and depreciation of plant. In addition, the cost of materials has increased, and the charges for pension liability and depreciation are higher. The Government is, therefore, considering increasing the cost to the public.

WANT MORE CATALOGUES.

Latest Issues Needed at Leading U. S. Consulate in Brazil.

The Consulate General at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, would be pleased to receive from firms in the United States catalogues, &c., for its library of commercial catalogues. This library is available to Brazilian merchants, and frequently visitors are interested in placing orders for American goods, in case the catalogues are up to date and contain price lists, &c., intelligible to the local commercial public. The file is lacking in up to date catalogues of the following items: Agricultural implements and tractors; athletic goods, including gymnasium supplies; automobiles and accessories; chemicals; colleges; material for the manufacture of elastic goods, such as suspenders; office furniture, wooden as well as steel; glassware; iron and steel products; railway equipment and machinery in general.

According to Vice Consul A. I. Hasskarl, the chemical catalogues should contain not only the prices but also minute information concerning each chemical for the assistance of the Brazilian chemist. This, he says, was the German method of introducing this class of goods, and made the German article a proverb among the local trade.

Trade Notes for Belgian Papers.

The American Consulate at Brussels has arranged with the Belgian Ministry of Economics for the publication in their bulletin of trade items made up from the American commercial letters received by this consulate. One Belgian trade journal has already promised to reproduce these same items in its paper free of expense, so that they will be brought to the attention of Belgian manufacturers or importers who would be interested. This official bulletin appears weekly, and each week a new list of similar items will be given.

New Zealand Fixes Rice Prices.

The New Zealand Government has fixed the maximum wholesale and retail prices for the sale of rice in that Dominion. The maximum price of rice when sold wholesale ex store, will be $7.30 per hundredweight, (112 pounds,) and the maximum retail price will be 8 cents per pound, except in out-of-the-way places, where the Board of Trade is arranging to allow retailers to charge slightly higher prices on account of extra carrying charges.

EXPORTS MAKE BIG GAIN.

Shipments from London to U. S. Show 67 Per Cent. Increase.

For the half year ended June 30, 1919, the value of declared exports from London to the United States aggregated $58,887,899, compared with $35,233,326 in the corresponding period of 1918. This is an increase of $23,654,573, or slightly over 67 per cent. The principal items were: Precious stones, $18,047,026; furs, $6,823,487; rubber, $8,819,574; tin, $180,971; works of art, $1,812,399; hides, $1,871,310, and wool, $1,153,159.

It will be observed that precious stones have more than doubled in value, while a very marked revival has set in in exports of hides and wool. Rubber also is more than twice as high, but the major part covers shipments effected during the first three months of the current year, when the value totaled $6,298,697. For the month of June this year the total aggregated $11,108,650, compared with $3,261,785 for the corresponding month of 1918 and $10,432,067 in May, 1919. Precious stones accounted for $3,109,636, against $2,545,049 in May, and noticeably large shipments of pearls were made. The figures are from Consul General Robert P. Skinner, London.

BUSINESS ENLISTING COLLEGE TEACHERS

Salary Competition a Menace to Universities Unless Pay Is Raised, Say Columbia Men.

HARVARD PLAN FINDS FAVOR

Educators Predict Nation-Wide Campaign by Private Institutions for Endowments.

American colleges and universities are now pitted against business and the professions in an effort to enlist the best talent of the nation, according to Professor George D. Strayer, of Teachers College, Columbia University, President of the National Educational Association. "The war has actually created a market for college professors," said Dr. Strayer yesterday. "Unless the salaries of teachers are increased the entire school system of the country must suffer."

Dr. Strayer was one of several Columbia professors interviewed on the question of better pay for educators, which is being impressed upon public attention by Harvard's campaign for an $11,000,000 endowment fund. The interviews brought out that even psychologists are in great demand in business life. Another opinion brought out was that the smaller private collegiate institutions should consolidate. Unless they merge, it was thought, many will face serious financial difficulties.

"The war has opened up a new field for men with specialized college training," said Dr. Strayer. "Go over the lists of college professors and administrative officers and you will find some of the biggest names in the story of the achievements of the war.

Must Pay More to Hold Men.

"The war has opened up a tremendously increased field for such men. Some are returning to the colleges, but for others, especially the younger men, the colleges must compete with the openings which are better paid. For a long time few college salaries have been high enough to draw the best men and hold them unless they had other sources of income. With the tremendously increased cost of living, this condition has been aggravated, and unless our universities are to suffer some means to increase the incomes of the universities must be worked out."

Professor Albert T. Poffenberger of the Department of Psychology, who was one of the Government's psychological experts during the war, spoke of the opportunities for psychologists in civil life.

"The war furnished the great opportunity to demonstrate that psychology is a practical and workable instrument," he said. "In our own department in Columbia, we have lost a dozen good men to positions with business or semi-public concerns. Today the psychological expert has no difficulty in getting a position in civil life commanding a salary far in excess of what he would receive in a college. Under present conditions, in a few years colleges will be suffering from a dearth of trained psychologists."

Professor Hartley B. Alexander, professor of philosophy in the University of Nebraska, and an instructor in Columbia Summer Session, spoke from the viewpoint of Western State universities.

"Our appropriation in Nebraska," he said, "is exactly the same as was made by the last Legislature, but aid has come from our special building appropriation. We expect an increased appropriation from the State, and have already granted our instructors a raise of from 15 to 25 per cent., which is regarded as only a first step. Everywhere, State universities of the West are preparing to increase the salaries of their instructors to offset the increased cost of living.

Favors Merger of Small Colleges.

"The University of Kansas has increased salaries 25 per cent. The University of Illinois has asked for a large increase. The University of Wisconsin is liberally supported. The West is prosperous and keenly interested in education, and we feel the financial difficulty automatically will adjust itself.

"Such is not the case with smaller private institutions which receive no State aid. Their salaries always have been small. I think it likely that the movement for consolidation, which is already being talked of, will become an actuality, unless many of the smaller institutions have to close their doors." Professor Carl Van Doren of the English Department believes the financial policy of the great private universities of the country will be conditioned largely by Harvard's success.

"Harvard men want the endowment," he said, "but the graduates and teachers of other universities should want it still more, because Harvard's effort will be a big contribution to education.

"The large private universities which have taken the lead in educational affairs must be supported more liberally by their alumni if they are to compete with the State universities, now that the custom of the mill tax is growing so popular. Under this system, with State taxation increasing, the university appropriation increases automatically.

"The opposite is true of private universities. With the growing popularity of the State income tax more restrictions will be put on private fortunes, and it is possible that large gifts to universities may become less frequent. I believe Harvard is taking the lead in a campaign which will end only when an endowment has been obtained for virtually every important college in the country."

Thinks Tuition Will Advance.

Professor Robert Sessions Woodworth, the most widely known psychologist of the country, said:

"It is not necessary to raise the salaries of college professors to the level of the salaries offered by business concerns. Men have never been attracted to the teaching profession by what they got out of it financially. Love of the work will continue to be a sufficient inducement. But the colleges must pay a sufficient salary to enable the professors to live and to educate their children."

"Salaries must be increased if those connected with university administration are not to feel that unwarranted hardships are being imposed upon the instruction staff," said John J. Coss, Professor of Philosophy and assistant director of the Summer session. "The problem can be met in four ways: First, by more careful study of university expenditures; second, by increasing tuition fees; third, by State or national contributions; fourth, by increased endowment.

"State or national aid for private institutions I do not believe either likely or desirable. I think our great universities can be self-supporting, except for individual gifts. Increased tuition fees should be offset by increased scholarships I believe. I think the colleges must turn to the endowment plan for support."

In the opinion of Professor William R. Shepherd of the Department of History foreign trade will draw young college men in increasing numbers. "America must have them if she is to hold her own," he said. "Men of intelligence and education will be called for, and more and more knowledge gained in the classroom will be turned to practical account. This is the competition the universities are facing."

BEFORE COMING TO THIS

FURNITURE SALE

YES, we mean just that. In fact, we urge comparison. The more you know about furniture values elsewhere the better will Bloomingdale Midsummer Furniture values appear to you. Patrons have volunteered the information that there seems to be a dearth of medium priced furniture throughout the city. Meaning that, while there is enough of the furniture purchaseable only by people of unlimited means, and too much of the cheapest kind of furniture, there is not nearly enough of the grade wanted by that vast majority who are neither rich nor poor. That is the sort of furniture of which you will find plenty at Bloomingdales.

BUT while the prices are medium relatively, and low comparatively, there is nothing "middling" about the furniture. Every stick of it is fully up to the high standard of what Bloomingdales knows all furniture should be. That the public agrees with us is attested by the fact that we are daily doubling and trebling former furniture sale records.

Announcing the Great Annual August Sale of

BLANKETS

Every Price Lower Than Next Autumns Price

Many Prices Lower Than Todays Mill Price

A GREAT Sale of Blankets in every sense of the word. Great in its masterly merchandising—months of planning and preparation were necessary. Great in the investment involved—thousands changed hands in the transactions. Great in the quantities included—mountains of stocks are here assembled for your choosing. Great in the quality of the merchandise and the varieties offered. Great in its import to you because of the great savings possible.

THE story of this Great Event reads like a merchandising fairy tale. With the signing of the armistice came a great drop in prices. It took merchandising vision of the highest type to foresee the rebound which was to follow. We bought and bought heavily. Since then prices on all merchandise made of wool or cotton have increased by leaps and bounds. In some instances the increase is over 100%—and the end is not yet. Therefore we cannot urge you too strongly to buy now in this Great Sale.

Blankets purchased in this Sale will be held for delivery in October if you so desire. A deposit is required.

WAGES AND PRODUCTION.

Labor is entitled to thanks for its perception and admission that its high wages are disappointing so far as the increased money fails to give accustomed satisfactions of wants. The unions whose spokesmen declare that the race between wages and prices should be stopped at the present level are among the most intelligent, and therefore the strongest, in the country. They will increase the country's indebtedness to them if they will go a step further and consider how the coveted satisfactions can be obtained without reduction of wages, or with reductions of wages smaller than the increased satisfactions of wants, or even of luxuries and pleasures of life. All would like to see this, and most would assist in the process if there were belief in such a possibility. What is the missing link in the argument, and what is the answer?

When more is produced there is more to divide, and wages will buy more without raising prices. It is true that there has been a great increase of production during the war, and that prices have risen. That is the exception which goes to prove the rule that increased production lowers prices. The reason for the exception is that the increase of production during war is limited to goods and services for which there is a strictly limited demand, and for the purpose of destruction rather than of satisfaction of general wants. During war the production of universally wanted goods decreased in something like a due proportion to the increase of such articles as munitions. Even stocks of general goods are depleted by the diversion of productive effort in other directions. The resultant decrease of supply in proportion to demand is the chief cause of the high cost of living. When productive effort is restored to peaceful proportion the result will be increase of supply, and the cost of living will fall, if the advice of the railway men is taken and the increase of nominal wages is stopped.

It is easy to supply examples under the theory. The British Board of Trade says that for the first twenty weeks of this year the production of coal was 240,000,000 tons, compared with 287,000,000 in the last pre-war year. In both years the number of miners was the same. How is it that in normal times, with lower demand for coal and with lower wages, there was a greater production than now, when the demand is urgent and wages are the highest ever known? There are several explanations, which, it is agreeable to say, apply to our workers in less degree, and to some of our workers not at all. One is that the British colliers are strangling their industry according to their custom by declining to produce according to their easy capacity. They are even threatening their country by refusing to produce at all, in order to force compliance with their political demands. Although better paid than ever before, they not only refuse to produce coal on a scale of a quarter billion dollars' worth a year, but by the lack of their product they check the distribution of goods over railways or seas, while themselves obtaining their supplies from the mines direct, by trade usage. The consequence is such an accumulation of demand over supply that the price has exceeded the Government limit, and the Government has had to announce an increase of price to consumers "because of increased wages, shorter hours for the miner, and decreased production per workman."

Happily, there is no such shocking indictment of our miners. They are agitating, but their demands are confined to their trade, and are arguable, even if excessive. There are other trades not as enlightened as our railway men, who now have an opportunity to lead the way to the painless reversion of prices from wartime heights to normal. When more men than are needed are put at the work for the sake of wages rather than production of transportation some are slackers. It is true that there is thus provided an object lesson against Government operation, and that the unions, which admit their dissatisfaction, although they have forced compliance with their demands, are put in an unpleasant position before their countrymen.

The discovery of the unionists that they also are consumers, and that what they compel to be paid into one hand they are compelled to pay out with the other, may serve to direct their attention to the fact that the consumers are the masters of unions and lawmakers alike when their needs compel them to take charge of the situation. There is now going on an uprising of consumers, the dominant partner in all businesses, even that of government. Capital has experienced, is experiencing, the punishment suitable for incurring a reputation for predatory conduct. The British strikers are predatory as surely as any trust. Let our workers avoid even suspicion of exacting more pay than their services are worth, or of conspiracy to limit production and protect slackers. For example, the President has asked Congress to investigate wage increases asked by the railway shopmen. The Director General informed him that their case was under consideration, but they struck. That is not consistent with the opinion of the Big Four brotherhoods that reduction of living cost is more desirable than increase of wages, and it is obnoxious to suspicion that the shopmen are checking production by opposing methods of efficiency. They demanded time pay instead of piecework wages, and when they were accommodated there was a great loss of production. That is one of the reasons why it is necessary still further to increase rates, and thus to put the cost of their slacking on the forgotten third party of their wage contract, the patrons of the railways. The whole is greater than the part, and no class of producers can afford to oppose their interests to the universal interest.

WORK, WAR, AND WOMEN.

Predictions that women would retain the prominence in industry which they achieved during the war seem to have been as little warranted in England as here. It is not merely that returning soldiers are reinstated in their old places; one in ten of the men who went to France have been disabled or killed, yet the women who took their places have for the most part been retired. In Lancashire a magneto factory, started during the war, was wholly operated by women, and to the great satisfaction of both employers and employed; yet the Allied Engineering Trades held a mass meeting and decreed that the women must give over their jobs.

That there is hardship here is obvious. Where women outnumber men as largely as they do in England, it is peculiarly unfortunate that any should be debarred, on the ground of sex, from work they have learned to do well. The suffragist organs are outspoken on the subject. But a hardship is not necessarily an injustice. Whatever may be the case with regard to the franchise, men and women are not, in point of fact, equals in industry, and will probably never become so. A woman may be supported, in whole or in part, by father, husband, brother. A man may not be. More than that, it is the strongest need of his nature to be always providing for another—who by some strange fatality is invariably a woman. And before he is well used to this charge he rubs his eyes to find that there are more mouths to feed, more backs to clothe.

That also, if you will, is an inequity. But there are no organs of masculine protest. It is a strange animal, the male of the genus homo. He shoulders his burden without a murmur, and the only thing that will rouse him to rage is to deny him opportunity for his mad altruism. That was the case of the men of the Allied Engineering Trades. Many of them were out of work owing to the maladjustment of industry after the war, and they did what they must in behalf of their women folk. It made them appear to the so-called feminists in a bad light, a very bad light. But a goodly number of women understood them. And it can scarcely be denied that society as a whole is the gainer. It would not be a useful world in which wives and children starved while spinsters arrayed themselves in glory.

So in one more respect, as it seems, the world is much what it was before the war. As long ago as 1891 Mr. SIDNEY WEBB, whose socialistic bias should make his evidence credible, pointed out that, in the entire history of industry, there are only a few and quite transitory instances in which men and women did precisely similar work in the same place and at the same time. If women are able to compete on even terms, as they did in the case of general stenography, they drive the men out. Men who support others cannot hold their positions against women who, except in rare instances, support only themselves, and who are very often in part supported. Dr. EDITH ABBOTT, in her able and exhaustive volume, "Women in Industry," published in 1910, found that, though women workers had increased in absolute number they had not, even in recent decades, increased relatively to men. To Dr. ABBOTT the fact seemed surprising—perhaps a little disillusioning; but, being a scientist, she recorded it candidly. In normal times woman is a transient in industry whose ultimate destination is marriage.

In England the present time is, of course, far from normal. Owing to the numerical excess of women there are many thousands for whom marriage is forever impossible. That these predestined spinsters should continue as the able and often highly skilled workers which they are is to be desired for many excellent reasons. But the problem of saying just which should and which should not enjoy this privilege is by no means easy. Even the most resolute Socialist might hesitate to serve on a bureau for selecting predestined spinsters. And there is the further difficulty that, owing to their single state, they would be able, at a pinch, to "undercut" the married male in the matter of wages. It is one of those vexatiously human situations out of which there appears to be no clear way.

A committee which has been investigating the status of women in the civil service highly praises the work of women during the war and recommends that, as far as possible, it shall be continued, even extended. But it concludes with the recommendation that they work along special lines. That seems to embody the logic of the situation. Already it has been accepted by many former war workers who are seeking vocations, for example as truck farmers, in which they do not compete with the wage-earning male.

HISTORIES OF THE WAR.

Poor in spirit is that publicist who is not about to set before the public, if he has not already done so, his own history of the war. Writing a history just now requires something more of literary skill than will be demanded of the savant who sets himself, in the year 2014, to writing the centennial history, with all the evidence before him. He, if he has patience enough, can give a connected and accurate account of such battles as the Marne and Jutland; the historian of today must be an artist indeed to explain them out of the meagre and contradictory materials at his disposal, and one can imagine him hurriedly stopping the presses so that he may rewrite, say, the chapter on Jutland in the light of Admiral JELLICOE'S book which has recently appeared. Also, there are such matters as the diplomatic enterprises of the Winter of 1917-18, which are somewhat dark and devious at present, which require a considerable amount of imagination if they are to be resolved into anything intelligible.

However, the timely historian has a great advantage. Much has been written about the war already, but the imagination staggers and reels at the contemplation of the millions of books on its various phases which will appear during the next hundred years. True, we do not know very much about the war as yet, and shall not till the rest of the evidence is in; but the less evidence available, the easier it is to explain everything. And the contemporary historian can plead in extenuation of any errors this very lack of data; his colleague of a century hence will have no such excuse, nor will the world accept the argument that the material was too much for any living man to grasp. Only one step further remains—to write the history of a war before it happens. The method is hardly Thucydidean, but THUCYDIDES wrote of a smaller world.

UNIVERSITY FINANCE.

The war has accustomed us to such large figures that very few realize the magnitude of the task which our leading universities have undertaken in their "drives" for a proper equipment of teaching and a proper payment of the teacher. Thus the graduates of Harvard, who are assembled in Cambridge for the "Summer School" which is instructing them as to the coming campaign, speak lightly of the $11,000,000 which they are to raise and confidently of the 36,000 Harvard graduates from whom they are to raise it. But if the Summer schooling of these financiers includes arithmetic, they must have discovered that the average gift of all Harvard graduates will have to be $305. A billion dollars for the war has come to seem a negligible detail; but in the family exchequer a dollar looms larger than ever before.

Statistics as to the earnings of college graduates bring little comfort. The average is considerably less than three thousand dollars, and this in spite of the fact that in each class there may be several men whose income is measured by hundreds of thousands. The drive thus contemplates a levy of more than 10 per cent. on the average annual income. And the college graduate belongs to the class that has suffered most severely from the war. Hand laborers have exacted an increase of wages which has fully kept pace with the increased cost of living, and in many cases has outstripped it; so that workingmen have become profuse buyers of talking machines and automobiles, silks, furs, and jewels. The salaried brain worker has had comparatively little and in many cases no increase of pay, so that many professional men now receive less than skilled mechanics. One of the posters prepared for the drive bears the legend: "A motorman gets 60 cents an hour, a "professor 18. Which is worth more, "gentlemen, minding the train or training the mind?" But young lawyers, doctors, and engineers are in much the same boat as the professor, as are ministers of all ages. Even the very rich graduates have had large slices cut from their incomes by war taxation—a further levy of 10 per cent. is no small matter for any one.

Yet in all probability the drive will succeed. Its success will be of good augury for other colleges where similar work must be done. Many of the men assembled at Cambridge predict an oversubscription. They should know, if anybody. They know, for one thing, that the class of salaried brain workers to which the college graduate belongs has a record of loyalty and sacrifice that is second to none. They have furnished most of the officers and a large proportion of the men for our army; and those of them who were obliged to stay at home have been no less useful in Liberty Loan drives and in general war work. As a class they have received little praise, or none; and their manifest grievances have been stated rather than insisted upon, and very modestly stated at that. But they, if any class, may be counted on to rise to the call of duty.

That it is a duty there can be no question. The world stands in need of light and leading as never before. The integrity of our free institutions is menaced—at not a few points it is, for the time being, violated. Industrially and socially the future of the world looks darker than most of us like to admit. Only one power can ultimately prevail, the power of knowledge—a clear and vigorous understanding of where we are and whither we are tending. President LOWELL has said that an underpaid teacher is a discontented teacher, a teacher who lacks responsibility and loyalty to his high office. Of this we have had abundant evidence in the case of those who have left their professorships to teach socialism in the cities—and have there received far greater pay for subversive doctrine than they received as Faculty members. But the case is worse than that. When teachers are underpaid and discontented, the profession fails to attract the more vigorous and ambitious type of youth. The gradual decline in the mental and the character standard of university Faculties is not so obvious as the occasional instance of radical discontent; but it is well understood by those who are in a position to know, and in the long run it is far more dangerous. The duty to the alma mater is a duty of transcendent importance to the nation.

BRITISH LABOR POLITICS.

In view of the strange sympathy of too many members of the British Labor Party and too many trade union leaders with Bolshevism, one wonders if any perception of its real character has penetrated their minds. Those 200,000 Yorkshire miners on strike, those 500,000 Lancashire cotton operatives who lay idle for three weeks, those Liverpool dockers who tied up shipping for a fortnight, those bakers now bent on strike, those London policemen whom radicals are trying vainly to lead into a second strike, that egregious Triple Alliance itself, that combination of miners, railroad men, and transport workers, whose magnates are always threatening "direct action," the unreserved use of all their political and industrial power—what chance would they have in a State controlled by the Bolshevist principles and practices.

Even in Hungary, where Bolshevism was introduced and is tolerated as a Magyar means of compulsion on the Entente Powers, the genuine theory and practice of Bolshevism have been exhibited. There all workers were told that they must work for the august Soviet Government at a wage fixed by it. A workman in a form of labor regarded as necessary to the Government cannot change it. A miner, for example, must remain a miner and stick to his work. Otherwise he will be punished for "disobedience," and those amiable disciplinarians, the gentlemen of the Red Guard, will attend to the punishment, which is no less than death. Yet the leaders of the British Miners' Federation dote on the Bolsheviki, and are never tired of making violent threats against the British Government. Mr. SMILLIE is perhaps the best known of those leaders. The month of the armistice he deemed a propitious time to illumine Great Britain with what the Soviet autocrats, whose strikebreakers are Red Guards, love to call "the glorious light of the new free life." Revolutionists and "rebels" were having a dinner, a "Reunion of Rebels" dinner. Mr. SMILLIE cheered them with this telegram: "I am speaking to the "men at Blackburn for the purpose of "urging them utterly to refuse to recog-"nize the Coalition Government and at "once to form a Soviet Workers' Gov-"ernment."

One of the Labor leaders has actually put forward the theory that "direct action," the industrial strike, for the purpose of forcing the Government to adopt a particular policy and forcing the people to submit to it, is a form of popular mandate.

Thus constitutional government, representative government, the sovereignty of Parliament, the will of the people legally expressed under universal suffrage, are of no account. Trade union congresses, labor conferences, a few obscure executive committees, the Triple Alliance imposing the plans of a few leaders upon the majority—that is the British Government as understood by a coterie of Labor extremists. The inspirers of the program of violence, the leaders of the program of direct action, the hankerers after Bolshevism, are for the most part not in Parliament. The Snowdens, the Ramsay MacDonalds, the Hendersons, most of the batch of pacifists, internationalists, and revolutionists, were beaten at the polls. Of 707 members of the House of Commons only 74 Labor men were elected, and it must be remembered that the Labor Party itself is divided into sections; that sturdy anti-Germans like HAVELOCK WILSON, M. P., and BEN TILLETT, like former Food Controller CLINE and Mr. THOMAS, both members of the House, have no fondness for this rash extraconstitutional program. It is estimated that there are from eighteen to twenty million British electors, of whom of course the great majority are working men and women. If they were eager to have Labor regarded as a separate entity or class represented in the House, they took good pains not to manifest that eagerness last December.

In the matter of nationalization, which means syndicalism to the Syndicalists, and ultimate ruin, if persisted in to the end, to the industries and Great Britain, Mr. LLOYD GEORGE'S Government, according to Sir ERIC GEDDES, has "an open mind." Government control and coordination is to continue to the railroads for two years, the Government guaranteeing a dividend. Meanwhile, thoughtful Englishmen cannot watch without anxiety the conduct of the coal miners. Coal is the master-key industry of Great Britain. Her industries, her export trade depend upon it. What do the miners care for the increase in its price? They get their coal free. If, as the Chief Inspector of Mines testified before the Coal Commission, output diminishes as wages go up, the miner is comfortable. What is the use of working more than five days in the week? Stimulated by foolish or sinister leaders, men tainted with internationalism and Sovietism, inspired by Socialists and Syndicalists, the British trade unions, in their utter carelessness of the public and of national interests seem to be in evil case.

The national revenue that must be raised will be at least five times what was required before the war. Yet the Government is continually asked, and too often consents, to spend more money in satisfying union demands; and, instead of giving every ounce of energy toward producing that fivefold output which is absolutely necessary, many of the workers' unions malinger and loaf. Of course, this imported insanity of direct action cannot thrive long amid the common sense of the British people. In regard to the nationalization of industries and further concessions and doles at the dictation of a Socialist or Bolshevist minority the Government of Mr. LLOYD GEORGE will have to come to a decision before long. The coalition will split up at once if a radical policy is followed.

AN AUSTRIAN INVASION.

Resumption of friendly relations with the enemy is a somewhat delicate matter, made so by the enemy's own character. But the Austrians were never so bad as the Germans, and the distinction between people and Government, though hardly valid in either country, is much more obvious in Austria than in Prussia. Moreover, Germany still has much of the will and something of the power to harm; apparently what is left of Austria has neither.

So it is possible to view without much alarm the report that certain Viennese composers of operetta are to tour America next Winter. They will travel about over these extensive States, conducting their own operas and demonstrating to America that they have a culture worth preserving. There is no doubt about that. Vienna as a political centre was a fount of much abomination, but Vienna as the cultural capital of Eastern Europe was an influence felt through many nations which took some of their fashions or customs from Vienna, however much they might dislike Austrian diplomacy. Vienna beer, in itself by no means the most distinguished cultural product of Austria, had made peaceful penetration of the Balkans while Austrian diplomats were finding their efforts thwarted by new national sentiments rising inconveniently in the path of Hapsburg expansion. Vienna rolls and coffee and chocolate had conquered the world long ago.

But in sending forth as ambassadors the masters of operetta Vienna makes her best appeal. OSCAR STRAUSS of "A Waltz Dream" and "The Chocolate Soldier" can re-establish an international harmony of artistic spirits that would be beyond the powers of his namesake RICHARD, whose political ideas are as dissonant as his chords. And the most inveterate Magyarophobe would never visit the misdeeds of STEPHEN TISZA on FRANZ LEHAR of "The Merry Widow" and a dozen other international successes.

What was bad in Austria—and it was very bad—seems to have been destroyed. A world which is laboriously picking up the business of life after a five years' interlude cannot afford to discard anything of what has survived from the international culture of the early years of the twentieth century. Prague and other cities of the old Dual Monarchy will doubtless acquire some of Vienna's departed glory, but the Viennese café and the Viennese waltz will do much to alleviate the hardships of the years of reconstruction.

HUMANITIES AND SCIENCE.

Dr. Keen Declares Each Incomplete Without the Other.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am heartily in accord with the fine editorial in your issue of the 28th anent Osler's remarkable address. Stewart's axiom, "No human letters without natural science and no science without human letters," may well be taken to heart by every humanist and every scientist.

The policy of the American Philosophical Society, "held at Philadelphia, to promote useful knowledge," is most instructive. Founded by Franklin on the model of the Royal Society, which, until a relatively few years ago, embraced both the humanities and science, the American society has adhered to the broad original scope, and still embraces both letters and science. Among our members we include philologists, historians, archaeologists, statesmen, lawyers, &c., as well as astronomers, physicists, chemists, physicians, &c. From the ranks of the society have been chosen eight Presidents of the United States, and Thomas Jefferson was our President during all his eight years as President of the United States, and for ten additional years—a unique record as a society.

The Royal Society, however, finally dropped the humanities. The "British Academy" then took them over, leaving the sciences to the Royal Society. It is sincerely to be hoped that Osler's remarkable learning, his scintillating wit and his slashing sword dealing heavy blows to the "exsuccous" Oxford Dons of the Classical Association, and also to his own scientific friends and colleagues, may wake up both sides to the wisdom and the necessity of Stewart's axiom if the best result, "totus, teres atque rotundus," is to be attained.

ITALY IN THE WAR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your today's editorial on "Italy's Needs" will encounter a warm appreciation among the Italians on this side and on the other side of the Atlantic.

The almost unendurable sacrifices for the war have left Italy in need, or, more properly, in distress, and, as you well put it, to extend to her the helping hand is not only a duty but also a profitable business.

If you may allow a remark about your editorial, it is about your interpretation of Nitti's words: "None can say that we did not win the war."

On this subject you recall, for instance, the patriotism of that Italian firm putting out 2,000 unordered guns after the disaster of Caporetto, for "completing the discomfiture of the Austrians and redeeming the campaign of Italy's allies." But it is history that in those days the Austrians were not completely defeated, but simply halted on the "impossible" line of the Piave by the entire sacrifice of the young boys of the class of 1899 then being drilled—a feat that puts that gun delivery in the background. "The redeeming of the campaign of Italy's allies" is a rather vague expression if one knows that the Allies started coming to the rescue of Italy in November, 1917, while by December the Austrians were completely stopped on the new line before said Allies had the possibility of firing at them a single shot. Being attached to British headquarters for billeting accommodations for the arriving troops, I can vouch for the wonderful moral effect that the news of their coming had among the population, but Pavia and Mantua, where they assembled, never were in the firing line. For every Italian the words of Nitti mean that Italy, putting an abrupt end to the war, also decided the dawn of victory.

Nobody who read the Italian War Bulletin of Nov. 4, 1918, will doubt that Italy won in battle her part of the war, giving to Austria a well-deserved Caporettissimo. It is then up to the judgment of everybody to decide which was the necessarily abrupt and amazing feat of those November days that brought about the abrupt peace that no statesman, General, or banker expected. After Nov. 4 Ludendorff admitted that the sudden disappearance of the Austrian Army compelled him to ask for an armistice within six days.

The war was won by the common and constant hammering at the enemy, and in this Italy has done her share, but concerning the unexpected end of the war Italy simply refers to her bulletin of Nov. 4, 1918, announcing to the world that after ten days of battle the Austrian Army "was destroyed."

LET MR. BORAH DO IT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Senator Borah and his associates seem to be pursuing a course which leads to war. In this I have a vital interest, because Uncle Sam will call on me to fight a new war just as he did the last one. It is a cinch that he can't depend on Borah for anything but words.

Senator Borah and his associates are indignant over the violation of Chinese rights in Shantung. Are they going to fight Japan about it?

Senator Borah and his associates are very sympathetic with the inhabitants of the Sarre Basin, who must submit to French rule. Do they intend to fight France about it?

Senator Borah and his associates are ardent champions of the rights of Ireland, and support the gentle Sinn Feiners in their protests against the barbarous savages of England. Are they going to fight England to free Ireland?

Finally, are they going to fight Japan, France, and England all at one time? Because, if they are, I am going to be out in the tall timber and very hard to find.

WE CAN CONSTRUE THE TREATY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Even if the Peace Treaty were ambiguous—which in my humble judgment it is not—as to internal questions such as immigration, or external such as the Monroe Doctrine, yet there is a reason why amendments, or reservations, or interpretations, when ratifying it, are wholly unnecessary.

No Supreme Court to expound the treaty is created. In the absence of such a court, it will be open to the United States to construe the treaty on any question, when it arises. Its construction will, of course, be in accordance with our interests, and the sanction for it will lie in war to uphold that construction, in case it is not acquiesced in by other nations. What more do the advocates of amendments, reservations, or interpretations want? Why burden a ratification with needless qualifications?

Let the treaty be speedily ratified as it stands, peace restored to a war-worn world, the nations given an opportunity to work together, and leave all questions which may divide them to be settled as they arise.

THE NEED OF ARTICLE X.

League Would Be Ineffective to Protect Peace Without It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The flood of oratory which is poured forth by the Republican leaders in the Senate in opposition to the League of Nations covenant carries little conviction that they are actually sincere in speaking as they do. The real motives which are back of their opposition are carefully concealed from public view. To express them would mean political suicide. They must be hidden beneath a cloud of pretexts.

To distinguish between the real motives and the pretexts in the Senatorial opposition to the League covenant is made easy by two circumstances: the approach of the Presidential election and the ambition of Presidential aspirants to reveal themselves so conspicuously as to attract the eyes of the public as well as the attention of the party machine.

Furthermore, of course, not even Republican Senators are free from the weaknesses of human nature. They have a thirst for vengeance upon the President because their constitutional powers to "advise" received so scant recognition by the President during the peace negotiations. Their "advice" must, therefore, appear to them as being of far greater value than the peace of the world; for if peace had been the aim of their "advice," if asked and given, then surely they have before them in the form of the League covenant the most conclusive evidence that the President must have read their minds. Would they actually have advised a different course?

They seem to find in Article X. of the League covenant probably the best reason for opposing its ratification. This article places upon the members of the League the obligation "to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the League." Now, a careful study of the League covenant shows unmistakably that Article X. in its present form is the very backbone of the League of Nations; without it the whole structure falls to the ground. No League of Nations covenant would be worth the paper upon which it is written without such provisions as are contained in Article X.—unless all men were angels.

Article X. is necessary in its present form because:

1. Our treaty with France, by which we agree to come to her immediate support in case of German aggression, is intended to be merely temporary, to last until the League has been so effectively organized as to render that alliance superfluous. It is well that it is temporary, because:

2. It would be too wide and inexpedient a departure from our traditional national policy to enter into a permanent alliance with any particular European nation with its centuries' old heritage of animosities, which will the more easily break into actual hostilities under a system of alliances than under the efective guarantee of a League of many nations.

3. Without Article X. in its present form the League would be reduced to so ineffective an institution for peace that a tendency toward secret alliances would immediately result. Alliances are a challenge to war. We lack no evidence of that now, after so long an experience with them. Members of the League thus grouped against each other, due to mutual fear of "external aggression" and loss of "political independence," will constitute dangerous explosive material which at the least provocation might shatter both the League and whatever we have left of civilization.

4. The very severity of the treaty of peace with Germany, although not severe enough when measured by the offenses committed, makes the ratification of Article X. without any modification absolutely necessary. We are now sufficiently acquainted with Germany to know that she will not balk at the suggestion of a war of revenge as soon as the opportunity is afforded. In the absence of an effective military organization in the League, by which to enforce peace the treaty will constitute a convenient text upon which to preach a war of revenge. The loose union of our thirteen original States under the Article of Confederation is a case in point. That union was nothing but an ineffective league, in which each member did practically as it pleased, even going so far as to violate the treaty of peace with Great Britain because Congress was not given sufficient powers by the articles to prevent such violation. The establishment of "a more perfect union" was imperative; and is there any one who does not appreciate the results of the change, and who does not know what institutions made the union "more perfect"?

Does it seem, therefore, that those who declaim so vociferously against Article X., which will make of the League an effective organization for peace, are actually playing into the very hands of German reactionaries, junkers, and all those who have little serious intention of abiding by the terms of the treaty or of keeping the peace?

PROTECT INDEPENDENCE HALL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You will be interested to learn that, owing to the letters you have printed, the city authorities have this morning begun to remove the grand stand fire trap at the back of Independence Hall; the spark-catching awnings in front have been taken down and stored with the paving stones, George Washington, remains of the front stands, and other flotsam and jetsam which decorate the approaches to all our public buildings in true Philadelphia fashion.

But you, Sir, have actually waked Philadelphia up. And now will you not start the campaign to make Independence Hall a national monument and so remove it from the control—or want of control—of a city which is unworthy of it, and incapable of taking care of it?

GROWTH.

Each dream that fires a mortal brain
Some day can be made true:
Whatever man can faintly hope
That can he strongly do.

Once, terrified, he scanned the skies,
And feared each stone, each tree;
But something in him watched and strove,
And led his spirit free.

Propitiate, but not with gifts,
The Powers of heaven and earth:
They and their friendly use are yours
By right of soul, of birth.

Dream, then, nor fear to dream too fair.
(Each seed is made to swell.)
If hand and brain are linked by faith,
God's realm is yours as well!

LETTERS TO THE TIMES ON ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL QUESTIONS

WHY CHINA DID NOT SIGN

Nothing to Lose by Her Refusal—A Chinese View of Japanese Penetration

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some one is stuffing the American press with reports to the effect that the opinion of China is divided as to her refusal to sign the Peace Treaty at Versailles June 28, and that the Chinese Government is extremely suspicious as to the possible relief which may accrue to it from the League of Nations. Without inquiring into the sources of these reports, it is safe to say that they are absolutely unfounded. The refusal of the Chinese peace delegation to sign the Versailles treaty is based upon express instructions from the Peking Government to that effect and has the backing of the whole country. No matter what consequences may follow, China is morally and legally justified in taking the step she did.

To sign or not to sign is a question that has confronted the Chinese peace delegation at Paris ever since the day when the council of "Big Three" decided that it was to Japan and not to China that the German rights and concesaions in Shantung should be transferred. The Crinese envoys immediately sought a revision of this decision, while in the meantime they cabled for instructions from the Peking Government as to their future conduct. They were instructed that they should sign the treaty with reservation on the Shantung clauses if a revision of them was n granted. Accordingly, in the plenary session in which the peace terms were made known to all the allied and associated powers before presenting to the German delegation, Lou Tseng-hsing, the head of the Chinese delegation, read the following reservation:

> The Chinese delegation beg to express their disappointment at the settlement proposed by the Council of the Prime Ministers. They also feel certain that this disappointment will be shared in all its intensity by the Chinese Nation. The proposed settlement appears to have been made without giving due regard to the consideration of right, justice, and the national security of China—consideration which the Chinese delegation emphasized again and again in their hearings before the Council of the Prime Ministers against the proposed settlement, in the hope of having it revised. And if such revision cannot be had, they deem it their duty to make a reservation on the said clauses now.

This reservation was made in the plenary session of May 6. Since then the Chinese delegates have made every effort to have the decision of the "Big Three" revised. When this was refused, the Chinese delegates proposed to sign the Peace Treaty with these words to be written above their signatures: "Subject to the reservation made at the plenary session of May 6, relative to the question of Shantung in Articles 156, 157 and 158." On June 27, M. Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, formally notified them, on behalf of the Council, that this would not be allowed. It is yet unknown who was really responsible for this refusal and under what rulings of international law or diplomatic usage it was made. President Wilson was reported to have been in favor of allowing the Chinese delegates to attach their signatures with reservations, but the decision of the Conference, in which he finally concurred, was that "the Chinese must sign the treaty as it is or not at all."

Having failed to secure the consent of the Council to insert a reservation after their signatures and at the same time realizing that there was little to gain by not signing the treaty, the Chinese delegates, at the eleventh hour, made the last attempt of compromise which would enable them to sign the treaty without betraying their sense of honor and duty to their country. This consisted in a request that an opportunity should be given them to make a public declaration upon the signing of the treaty. The Council ruled that "they could make a declaration of their position after signature, but not before." This procedure was regarded by the Chinese delegation as incapable of protecting China's rights. Thus, on June 28, when the historic ceremony was performed, the Chinese delegates were conspicuous by their absence. "After failing in all earnest attempts at conciliation," to quote the official statement of the Chinese delegation, "and after seeing every honorable compromise rejected, the Chinese delegation had no course open save to adhere to the path of duty to their country. The Peace Conference having denied China justice in the settlement of the Shantung question, and having today, in effect, prevented the delegation from signing the treaty without sacrificing their sense of right, justice, and patriotic duty, the Chinese delegates submit their case to the impartial judgment of the world."

China's refusal to sign was therefore the result of the repeated failures of coming to a compromise. It was based upon specific instructions from the Peking Government, and that step was taken after the most careful deliberation by the Chinese delegates. It is inconceivable, and hard to believe in the report, that the Chinese official opinion is divided over this action when it is a fait accompli.

The more the question is considered the easier it is to understand the wisdom of China's refusal to sign the Peace Treaty with Germany. While China has little to gain by not signing it, it is to be admitted, China has nothing to lose. On the one hand, China is not legally bound by the Shantung settlement, which is a fearful example of outraged justice at the hands of the peace conferees. Whether or not Japan will hold Shantung by force for one or one hundred years so long as China has not recognized the settlement, Japan has no more right to the territory and German concessions in Shantung than Great Britain or the United States might have to Alsace-Lorraine if it had been taken away from France without her consent. On the other hand, while refusing to recognize the Shantung settlement, China is to gain everything that Germany had to give up. China is of course not bound by the treaty, but Germany is, for the simple reason that she has signed and ratified the treaty. As soon as the other allied and associated powers have done the same thing, provisions in Articles 128-134 in regard to China will come into operation. China, therefore, need not worry about the Hankow concessions, the Boxer indemnity, and all the astronomical instruments which Germany undertakes to restore.

Yet it is interesting to note that, as far as the Shantung settlement is concerned, China cannot hope anything better from Germany. This is clear when it is remembered that Germany, after she has signed and ratified the treaty, is bound to its provisions. She is not free to deal with China singly and i terms different from what she has already agreed upon. The treaty provides "Germany renounces, in favor of Japan, all her rights, titles and privileges," and she is bound to do so. B making a separate peace treaty w Germany, China cannot hope to alter or modify the terms of the Shantung settlement without involving Germany into serious breaches. In other words, China may, by dint of diplomatic dexte gain something more, but not alter anything, than what is already provided for in the treaty. This is the most interesting legal situation.

This being evident, what is then the foundation for the report that the opinion in China is divided as to her refusal to sign the treaty with Germany and that the Peking Government is fearf of its consequences? It is said that by failing to sign the treaty, China is still at war with Germany. But this is no reason for anxiety. For commercial and economic reasons, it is more than likely that Germany will sue for peace sooner than the Chinese may realize. It is also pointed out that China's refusal to sign the Peace Treaty excludes her from the League of Nations and that she is thus deprived of certain rights of redress under that covenant. But is it not true that China can become a member of the League by signing the Austrian Peace Treaty, as her delegates have proposed to do? What difference does it make to China, whether a member of the League or not, so long as she maintains her sovereign rights, insists upon her dignity, and refuses to recognize the Shantung settlement?

Even if she is not to be a member of the League, now or forever, China can seek relief from the League by virtue of the Seventeenth Article of the covenant, which provides to meet the eventuality of a dispute arising between a member of the League and a State which is not a member of the League. Furthermore, the first problem which China is likely to bring before the League is the Shantung settlement, and it is highly doubtful whether the Council would revise the decision. In the final analysis, therefore, the only safe course open to China is the one which her delegates at the Peace Conference have pursued—to refuse to sign the Peace Treaty with Germany and thus to refuse to recognize the validity of the Shantung decision and to right the wrong by means of the economic weapons which the Chinese people are now so widely using. It may take months, and years, but if the Chinese people can learn "to stick" they will win. G. ZAY WOOD.

Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., July 11, 1919.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

With regard to the editorial which appeared in today's issue of THE TIMES, kindly allow me to make a few remarks which I hope will help to elucidate some of the statements which you made. It is a matter of common acknowledgment that the so-called faith of the Japanese people in their political, as well as in their economic and commercial dealings, with the Chinese people has been a powerful instrument with which to carry out their sinister designs of exploitation. It is not too much to say that the whole history of Japanese intercourse with their Chinese neighbors has been characterized by hypocrisy. Disillusionment on the part of idealistic China has finally taught her to be more cautious in her approaches to a nation that is fundamentally lacking in moral stamina.

It is therefore a matter of course that the Chinese people are looking with great concern at the present "pledge to restore to China full control over the Shantung territory, reserving to herself [Japan] only certain commercial concessions such as are enjoyed by other powers in China." The people of China have every reason to believe, in fact the whole world has every reason to believe, that the present pledge is nothing more than the usual chicanery which the Chinese people have always had the misfortune to deal with. If Japan is willing, as she has repeatedly expressed, to restore to China full control of the much-coveted territory of Shantung, say within ten or twenty years, why, I want to ask, has she fought for it so relentlessly and ruthlessly at the Peace Conference? If, after all, she is to renounce all her claims within a short period in the rich province already teeming with a tremendous population of 40,000,000, why, the world must be wondering, has she been trying to fill the land with surplus population from Japan, which has increased in the City of Tsing-tao alone from 350 in 1913 to 50,000, to establish civil as well as military administration bureaus along the railway that extends from the coast to the capital of the province, to flood the market with Japanese currency; in short, to establish a Japanese colony?

The whole situation is overwhelmingly paradoxical. Did not the pioneers when they went westward with their wives and children, cultivating the lands that they allotted to them, have the idea of a permanent settlement upon the new soil? It would be folly, indeed, if they had to return to their original abodes within a specific short period after indefatigable labors and extreme exertions of energy. It is not difficult, then, in the light of what the Japanese are actually attempting in the peninsula, to interpret the precise meaning of this "pledge." It is perfectly clear that it is a bait with which the Japanese are trying to decoy the world. And mark further—in the "pledge" the Japanese are careful to say that only "political control" will be restored to China and that they will reserve "certain commercial concessions" to themselves. Thus, even though they carry out the "pledge" in all sincerity, the Japanese will still have virtual control over the whole province. The mines with their invaluable minerals, the railroads connecting the strategic points of the peninsula and of the adjacent lands, the industries, and all the life-producing materials will still be in possession of the Japanese. The kernel will be devoured, leaving only the shell behind. The expression of one of the Chinese delegates that, even if the pledge were carried out, China would retain only "the shadow and not the substance of her rich province," is true indeed.

Pledge or no pledge—and they amount to practically the same thing, even though the pledge were carried out—the Chinese people have absolute right in insisting upon the retrocession to their country of the former German rights and privileges which, by virtue of the abrogation of the treaties following the declaration of war by China upon the Central Powers, properly belong to her. It is contrary to all laws of right and justice to transfer these rights and privileges to any other power than their rightful owner, which is China. Japan has no right to them whatsoever. The argument that they have to be given over to her that the League of Nations may be established is entirely unsound, for such is a direct contradiction of the very principles upon which the League is founded. NUT TREES BY THE ROAD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Greek ideal of beauty and utility is not attained when our roadsides are lined with ordinary trees, even when the roadside has the luck of getting that far with its adornment. Nut trees or fruit trees will come in for consideration when we have advanced far enough in civilization in this matter. They are quite as beautiful and quite as generous with their shade as are the trees which yield nothing but bunches of leaves.

The reason why the public has not as yet taken up the question seriously is the reason why the automobile was not in common use twenty-five years ago. People have not turned their attention to this subject in a pragmatic way. When it comes to a question of choice between nut trees and other fruit trees for roadsides and parks, we must remember one point of practical importance. Common fruit trees having been cultivated for generations are more or less spoiled children, requiring continued cultivation if they are to be happy. Furthermore, the fruit trees have been cultivated in orchard form, thus giving their enemies opportunity to develop in zoological garden form. Nut trees, on the other hand, do not as yet make very extensive demands upon their protectors, and they have kept the balance of nature with their enemies fairly well on the whole. It is quite true that the American chestnut is disappearing on account of a fungous parasite brought from Northern China, and the butternut is disappearing because of another fungous parasite believed at the moment to have been brought from abroad; but we now have hybrid chestnuts and hybrid butternuts which appear to be more resistant to enemies than were their parents. Roadside nut trees will vary with the locality. Black walnut, as a stately tree, will grow almost anywhere in New York State excepting in the Adirondack region. The same statement is true of the shag bark hickory. In many parts of New York State the Persian walnut is already thriving as an occasional roadside tree. The Asiatic tree hazel is very beautiful and hearty and bears abundant crops of nuts in this State.

Some of the white oaks bear nuts which are edible for man and always edible for stock. A number of the nut-bearing pine trees, notably the Korean pine and the Armand pine, are hardy and fruitful here.

Any one who is interested may subscribe to the journals devoted to the subject of nut culture in this country and he may turn to the responsible dealers for particularly valuable kinds of grafted nut trees which may as well be selected as scrub kinds for roadside planting. Nut trees furnish more nitrogen, starch, and oil to the acre than is furnished by any other crop, so that from a purely economic standpoint, aside from the question of beauty, nut trees with their crops, which may be gathered at leisure, would take precedence over other kinds of fruit trees. The most important question perhaps in this relation is social rather than economic.

For example, I planted a number of fruit trees around the borders of my estate in Connecticut in order to allow the passer-by to have some fruit. The passer-by turned out to be an alien horde which came from a distance, fought over the fruit before it was ripe, broke the branches from the trees in order to collect the fruit without trouble, and incidentally learned the way to my orcharda which are now raided periodically.

I then attempted to decorate both sides of a mile of public highway with pine trees and two of my men spent two days' time in setting out about 2,500 young pines along the public highway. As soon as they were large enough to show signs of beauty, people dug them up and moved them off to their own grounds, and this was not confined to an ignorant class. People came in automobiles and dug up those pine trees and carried them away, so now the only ones that are left are a few that had been injured by cattle, this being a free country.

DRUG ADDICTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The papers have failed woefully in publishing all of the news regarding narcotic addiction. They have published interviews with the police and members of the Board of Health. They have told the story of raids upon drug stores and physicians, and some, with a yellow tinge in their complexion, have told amusing stories of the scenes at the public clinic—scenes that were about as amusing to the actors therein as were those of the Roman arena.

But they have failed to tell the suffering of honest, hard-working people who have been driven to the very verge of despair by the rulings—people to whom drug addiction was a drag and a curse, who have staggered along as best they could under the burden of its cost, and who suddenly find themselves faced not by relief, but by an added expense. People who were in the habit of going once or twice a week for their prescriptions now find themselves forced to go every day with a corresponding burden of medical fees.

Meanwhile the Board of Health cries aloud that no reputable physician who is treating an addict legitimately will be interfered with. But the doctors don't trust the cry and resolutely refuse assistance.

The trouble lies in the public view of the addict. He may be a saint or sinner, a reputable citizen or criminal, a degenerate or possessed of all the virtues and accomplishments of the ages. He may be any or all of these things and he will be found to represent them, every one. But above all and through all, and in common with one another, he is a sick, a very sick man. His addiction is as true a disease as tuberculosis or typhoid. So why should he not be treated as he deserves?

OUR SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE

Shortcomings Which Hamper American Business Men in Competing with Europeans

By WALTER NEWBOLD WALMSLEY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having been a resident of Brazil for eleven years, and viewing with interest the attempts made by Americans to secure trade in South America, I may point out certain features which apparently have not been considered, at least with a true understanding of their value.

Personality, in commercial negotiations with the Latin Americans, counts for much more than it does in this country, and successful trade relationship can only be secured by means of a definite policy of education, both as to satisfying the South American of the advantages he would receive by the purchase of American goods and to the American with respect to the viewpoint he must see in order to make trade relationship a satisfactory one as distinctive from the viewpoint of his trade relationship with American customers.

While many native industries exist, a large portion of the industrial and commercial enterprises are under the control of foreigners; and it is but natural that these concerns purchase their supplies in or through their home country. This fact perhaps is not thoroughly understood by the average American manufacturer or salesman, and trade of this nature can only be established through control of enterprises in these countries.

There is, of course, a vast amount of purchasing made by locally owned concerns, the utilization of whose supplies is frequently made in a way foreign to methods and ideas of Americans. In other words, their standards are different, and while, of course, the seller naturally desires to sell the product which he can manufacture or secure the most economically, the purchaser desires to secure those things which most nearly approximate his standard; and it has been apparent to an interested observer for a great many years that Americans have not gone at this problem in the right way.

Europeans of many nationalities have colonized in South America, while the Americans who are there are few and scattered, and it is but natural that these foreign-born citizens would desire articles that they were accustomed to having in their native lands, to say nothing of the fact that they would desire that the purchase of articles they might desire would result in a benefit to their native land.

Europeans who have entered the commercial field in South America have studied the psychology of the matter much more thoroughly than Americans apparently have, or are doing, with the result that unless radical steps are taken, no matter how satisfactory trade conditions may be made, they will have an immense advantage over existing and future American trade.

To be sure Americans strive to standardize on certain lines of production and produce an output that will permit their mills and factories to operate as near capacity as possible, thus reducing the unit cost of the article produced; and where there is a demand for that particular article, the purchaser, of course, benefits likewise.

However, conditions and customs in South America often require an article to accomplish perhaps the same results but of a different type. The European, as a rule, sends his emissary to South America to study conditions and requirements and then sells the purchaser just what he desires; whereas the American, has been accustomed to send his salesman with the idea of practically forcing his goods down the customer's throat.

The average South American, highly educated and thoroughly honest, resents this method of negotiation, and immediately the American salesman is handicapped in this respect. He cannot accomplish anything by jumping off the boat, running into the office and saying, "Mr. Jones, I have a line of goods I wish to show you and take your order, but I am in a hurry to catch the next boat in order to make my schedule." He must go into the country as though he intends to stay there and become personally and intimately acquainted with the people, customs, and conditions, and through friendship he then will be able to secure the interest of his prospective customer.

Americans must not lose sight of the fact that the Latin-American purchaser has been very well taken care of in the past and is not prone to take a chance in the purchase of new articles or in dealing with new concerns. He does not look with favor upon paying for his purchases several months before he has had an opportunity to see his goods. The usual practice of Americans in the past has been to require cash in advance before the articles are placed aboard outgoing steamers in the United States. When he asks the seller why this is expected, he is told that he is not known in the United States, and consequently cannot be given that credit. On the other hand, he feels that he does not know the selling concern, and why should he, if he is satisfied with his purchases in Europe, extend this credit to the seller? Europeans as a rule provide through their banking agencies that the purchaser need not pay for his articles until they arrive in South America and he has a chance to see them, and development of trade between South America and the United States can only grow into large proportions when such financial facilities are provided.

The average American shipper is unused to the needs for a different type of packing required for articles for overseas shipment, and a great deal of dissatisfaction, as well as loss, has occurred, due to lack of proper packing. Moreover, the customs requirements in the various countries are different from each other, and different from those in the United States, and unless all the papers are correctly prepared great dissatisfaction arises through fines for their incorrectness and incidental delays in receipt of material. Packing should be made to provide for protection not only from the rough handling on the docks and the ocean, but also so that the articles may be easily examined in the Custom Houses and repacked for shipment to the interior; otherwise great loss of or damage to the shipment will result, thus causing dissatisfaction to the purchaser.

Another thing to be carefully watched is against misrepresentation. It frequently happens that a trial order may be given for a certain line of goods which the local distributer gradually works up a market for and decides to make a repeat order. In many instances this repeat order has not been followed with the identical article supplied at first, the shipper not taking the precaution to advise his customer that it is not exactly like the first lot, although it may be superior. This causes the local distributer to do his work all over again to build up a demand for the new article. This procedure may be all right from our American viewpoint, but it is not fair to the purchaser in the foreign country who has local conditions to meet. To build up a real, substantial foreign trade a spirit of intelligent co-operation should be followed out by Americans rather than attempt to force upon an unknown customer goods that he does not want.

While the average South American importer is an intelligent man and reads and talks fluently in several languages, it would aid him materially if correspondence and literature be printed in the language of his country. Americans who desire to enter into the South American trade should seriously and earnestly start educating themselves as to customs, conditions, and requirements of their proposed new customers as well as to attempt to educate them to the benefits which the new customer might receive in the use of the articles he desires to sell.

As to the question of agency referred to in the article in last Sunday's TIMES, there is a vast difference of opinion as to the best method. Naturally, the first consideration should be the type of the article for sale. A study of the situation will show those articles which are in most common and uniform demand, and for such it perhaps would be better to establish a supply at various conveniently located points, for by this way (under normal conditions) shipment may be made at times when freight rates are most advantageous. This procedure has the advantage that it frequently occurs that there is an immediate demand for certain articles, and the ability to deliver immediately justifies perhaps an advanced rate for same, and many times a purchaser is willing to pay considerably more for the article he desires if he can obtain it immediately than he would if he had to wait for several months until it could be shipped him from Europe or America.

A "SINGLE TAX" ON SALES

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial on July 24, entitled "The Republican Ice Cream Policy," ending with the suggestion that the Republicans substitute a consumption tax for the present tax on commodities and soft drinks, is sound. In connection therewith I beg to make the following suggestion regarding a "single tax" on industries:

The constantly increasing burdens on industry and the imposition of new taxes, such as the recent income tax payable to the State of New York, make it imperative for merchants to wake up, and, working through their Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade, make some concerted effort to induce Congress to repeal "our illogical taxing system" as it applies to business.

It must be evident to every thinking man that large sums of money, far in excess of our usual Governmental requirements, will be necessary for a number of years for national, State and municipal needs. It is fitting, therefore, that a substantial proportion of these moneys should be furnished by business, large and small; and business can furnish billions annually and thrive, provided the tax burdens are fair, certain, and equitable.

Congressman Henry T. Rainey, in a notable speech on the report of the Conference Committee, delivered on Feb. 8 last, characterized our taxing system as illogical, and outlined a plan for the future. On the question of a general and uniform commodities sales tax he said:

> A very small tax, indeed, on sales, to be paid either by the vendor or the vendee, would yield an immense sum of money. From a tax of this character we could exclude foods and medicines, and tax every other transaction. There could be no complaint with reference to this tax that some persons were being unfairly discriminated against. It would not bear heavier upon one business than on another business. A very light tax, indeed, varying, of course, with the amount of the sales, could be levied which would produce a billion dollars. A tax of this character could be expanded indefinitely.

There should be but one tax upon business, and that tax should be in lieu of all other business taxes. The tax I have in mind is a sales, or turn-over, tax, based on sales of every kind and variety of article, including raw materials, manufactured goods, and sales for consumption. All transfers of real property should be taxed at the same rate as merchandise, and on the sale price. The levy and collection of such a tax would be very easy, and, in the case of every business, it would be a stated percentage upon the actual sales computed annually, quarterly, or monthly, as Government requirements might demand. Transfers of real property, including houses, lands, mines, oil wells, would be subject to a like tax, payable at the time of passing title.

Here we have provision for an income from taxation—constant, certain, great—which does not depend upon the uncertainty of excess profit or any profit whatsoever. Every transaction will permit the passing along of the tax, directly or indirectly, to the purchaser, while it will be paid to the Government by the seller. In most cases it will be considered part of the overhead, and the burden of taxation will be so evenly distributed as not to be felt by any one. The final consumer of taxable articles will pay the accumulated tax in the form of increased prices, as he now finally pays every increase in price of raw materials, wages, &c.

Business is undoubtedly hampered at the present time by our complicated, uncertain tax system, which piles one sort of tax upon another sort of tax, until it takes a lawyer to tell the business man how to pay his taxes. Under the plan suggested, every business man would pay but one business tax, so simply levied that his bookkeeper would compute it without expensive legal assistance.

Conservative business men who have experienced lean years sandwiched in between years of prosperity are discouraged by the Treasury regulations, which prevent them from properly writing off slow or doubtful assets and from fortifying themselves during good times against the days when profits decline to the vanishing point. Such Treasury regulations are probably called forth by the very nature of the law, but they discourage thrift and effort, and, in the long run, must prove harmful to the entire country.

Let us have a "single tax" on sales, whether made by corporations, firms, or individuals. Such a tax could be levied to provide so much money that business could be exempt from any other tax for Federal revenues. Such a tax, moreover, would be more certain and constant than taxes based on profits, because, in times of depression taxes on net income or profits from business cannot be depended upon for large revenue.

All profits from business and other sales would still be taxable under our system of graduated income taxes whenever such profits have been distributed to shareholders of business corporations, or owners of business.

RATIFICATION IN 1803.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The occasion of the ratification of the purchase of Louisiana from France, 1803, presents some striking analogies to the present situation in Washington. The most striking repetition of history is found in the fact that President Jefferson was forced to combat the prejudices of partisanship in the members of Congress.

After convoking a special session of the Legislature, the President addressed the Senate and House of Representatives on Oct. 17, 1803. On the same day he sent a special message regarding the cession of the Province of Louisiana to the United States; on Oct. 21 he addressed Congress as follows:

> In my communication to you of the 17th instant, I informed you that conventions had been entered into with the Government of France for the cession of Louisiana to the United States. These, with the advice and consent of the Senate having now been ratified, and ratification exchanged for that of the First Consul of France in due form, they are communicated to you for consideration in your legislative capacity. You will observe that some important conditions cannot be carried into execution but with the sanction of the Legislature, and that time presses a decision on them without delay. [Messages and Papers of the Presidents, Vol. 1., pp. 362-3.]

Gouverneur Morris, a leader of the opposing party, in his advice concerning the wisdom of eliminating politics on occasions so momentous to the well-being of the nation, expressed his convictions to Senatorial friends. A similarity of arguments is noted between his conclusions and Mr. Taft's. No "interpretations" or "reservations," however, were thought of in that day:

> Albany, Nov. 9, 1803.
> To Jonathan Dayton, Senator in Congress.
> Dear Sir: The ratification of the treaty, and the subsequent acts for carrying it into effect, appear proper. The only doubting that Louisiana could have been obtained for less money, which remains to be proved, good faith requires that acts of this sort should be ratified. The President is the organ by which the public will is pronounced in transactions with foreign powers, and duty to ourselves requires that he be not disavowed, unless for reasons of the highest moment. * * *
>
> Having said so much, it is proper to add that I will neither censure nor compliment my friends who hold different opinions. They have, I presume, a knowledge of facts which I am not possessed of, or reasons which have not suggested themselves to my consideration.
> GOUVERNEUR MORRIS.

And to Roger Griswold he wrote from Morrisania on Nov. 25, 1803:

> Our friends in the Senate had, no doubt, good reason for voting against the ratification of the treaty. I should like to see a few of them assigned in a plain and simple way, and somewhat authoritatively. It seems to me, but I speak under correction and with perfect reliance on the judgment and information of my friends, that it might be advisable to leave the arena free for Democrats to squabble in, at the next election of president. It is probable that one of these two things would happen, either they will divide with mortal hatred, and according to the old proverb when knaves quarrel honest men come by their own, or else they will unite in their present chief. Should this happen, the confidence inspired, by such appearance of universal approbation, might take from his vanity the mantle which it now prances under, and give you more mammoth expectations, more dry docks, and more salt mountains.
> "From the above extracts from the correspondence of Gouverneur Morris, we are reminded that history repeats itself. Party feeling influences reason now as it did a hundred and more years ago.

HELP FOR KOLCHAK.

American Munitions Would Help Rout the Bolshevist Armies.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The recent military reverses of Admiral Kolchak's troops are a matter of vital significance not only to Russia but to this country as well. The loyal Russian troops, under the supreme guidance of Admiral Kolchak, are battling against a world enemy, whose aim it is to destroy modern civilization and the very idea of equity and justice throughout the world. Bolshevism has grown into an international danger. The world's trouble makers, whose only law is anarchy, whose only aim is the Great Divide, have indeed nothing to lose since they never possessed anything. It is one of the fundamental rules of strategy that an endeavor must be made to destroy the very base of the enemy. Therefore, it is in Russia herself that Bolshevism must be hit on its head as hard as possible. With Trotzky and Lenin left out of the game, world Bolshevism would lose its impetus.

The retreat of the Siberian forces on a wide front along the Ural Mountains is due largely, if not entirely, to the fact that loyal Russian troops are not adequately equipped. There is a distinct lack in heavy artillery, tanks, and medical supplies. With the war won, with Germany defeated, it should be very easy for this country to supply Admiral Kolchak's troops with all kinds of ammunition. At the same time, this assistance would be in accord with the decision adopted by the Supreme Council of the Parisian Peace Conference.

The American people should bear in mind that proper assistance rendered by them at the proper time to loyal Russia would never be forgotten by the latter. An American long-range gun firing in the plains of Siberia against the Bolshevist hordes would certainly appeal to a loyal Russian heart. The thunder of this gunfire would remind the Russian people that they have real friends somewhere across the ocean, and that those friends are proving, not only by words, but also by deeds, their loyalty to a great people, their sympathy toward the unspeakable sufferings of Russia.

CONGRESS AND THE ARMY

Must We Pay the Price of Unpreparedness Again Because of Neglect?

By JOHN J. GORMAN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A little more than three years ago our citizens engaged in the greatest demonstration in our history to prove to Congress our belief in military preparedness. As a direct result of these demonstrations Congress availed itself of its constitutional authority to pass the National Defense act of June 3, 1916.

Germany's acts all too soon plunged us into the great conflict. Safe behind a friendly French and English military bulwark we prepared ourselves as best we could, and while we prepared we gained experience which soon proved that the National Defense act was hopelessly inadequate. Congress, startled by the magnitude of what had been undertaken, willingly permitted the Administration and our military leaders to assume the responsibility for the conduct of the war by the passage of such bills as these military leaders recommended.

We finally aided in bringing the conflict to a successful conclusion, but at what an enormous and wholly unnecessary expense of life and money because of our unpreparedness!

Demobilization began. Our soldiers returned to their civilian occupations and our people, who had concentrated all their industries and energies toward the support of the army in the accomplishment of this end, adjusted their affairs to meet changed conditions. Concurrently the Administration, on the advice of its military leaders, informed Congress that an appropriation for a temporary military establishment of 509,000 officers and men would be necessary for the proper policing of our country, the care and maintenance of our newly acquired stores, equipment, and material, pending the adoption of a new military policy to be set forth, it is to be supposed, in a new National Defense act. But Congress, contrary to such advice, totally disregarded its obvious duty to our country by passing the Army Appropriation bill providing for about 225,000 men. This was approximately the number provided for in the antiquated and inadequate National Defense act of 1916. It failed to consider that the small saving of the expense of this reduced military establishment would be overshadowed by the enormous expense of loss in material for lack of a trained personnel as custodian.

Despite the fact that our military experts have for years pointed out the expense involved and the errors that would result from unpreparedness, Congress, following its ancient futile custom, appointed a committee to inquire into the conduct of the war. Report is current that Senator La Follette of Wisconsin has so far forgotten his duty to the Government that, in order to obtain the discharge of a single constituent, he has urged an amendment to the Naval Appropriation bill. This will result in over 12,000 men, who enlisted for four years, being discharged upon application to the Secretary of the Navy on or before Sept. 1, 1919. Another report is current that Congress will also abandon the preparedness plans desired by the people of the United States, which desire they so earnestly demonstrated some three years ago.

Our early experience in the war quickly taught us that modern science was playing such an important rôle it would be necessary to recast some old characters and also to introduce new ones. Consequently the artillery arm was greatly increased and improved; the army mule and wagon, officially the animal drawn transportation, being plainly inadequate, the Motor Transport Corps was added; the Air Service was added; the Chemical Warfare Service was added; the Tank Corps was added, and the poor old mud-crushing, pack-carrying doughboy had new and unusual weapons thrust into his willing but untrained hands.

Now all this huge mass of new material was the most scientific and technical with which any army ever dealt, and its purchase cost us many millions of dollars. Developed and purchased as it was during the war, it cost us, without doubt, far more than it would have cost if it had been purchased during peace times as an incident to training for military preparedness. In addition to this it takes a highly and expensively trained commissioned and enlisted personnel to care for and use it. Notwithstanding all this, Congress has seen fit to cut down the army with some reported results that are amazing. For instance, it is said that when demobilization is complete and assignments have been made in infantry, cavalry, and artillery, there will be none left to transfer to the new specialized arms. These will be reduced as follows: Air Service by 85 per cent. of flying officers, Motor Transport Corps by 90 per cent., Chemical Warfare Service by all but two officers in this country. The discharge of Air Service officers has already resulted in an increase of flying fatalities. After demobilization there will remain in this branch only 160 flying officers in this country, one in the Philippines, and two in Hawaii. When the work of the airplanes with the punitive expedition into Mexico is recalled, the situation appears serious to say the least, and leads to the question—Is all the experience, research work and training that active service has necessitated to be abandoned?

No business house using such scientific instruments as we possess would think of shutting down as Congress proposes we shall do. On the contrary, it would make the utmost effort to keep the plant operating, even if it became necessary to take business at a sacrifice rather than suffer the greater expense of loss of organization and deterioration which take place at any idle plant.

Our regular service has proved its worth beyond any reasonable doubt. It was our professional soldier who devised the means for raising an army, trained it, equipped it, led it into combat successfully, and is now completing its demobilization. We wish a regular service sufficiently large and efficient to protect us; to care for the material which we have acquired, and to form the nucleus around which our militia would mobilize in the event of serious hostilities.

The National Guard is an expensively maintained volunteer organization. With the experience it gained on the border it was unable to prepare for active service any sooner than the militia except in two or three isolated cases. It should be reorganized on a slightly different basis, and be composed of those who care to volunteer for further service. Such service, however, should include the most strenuous training for a sufficient length of time to make the National Guard a really efficient second line of defense, ready to enter upon active campaign at any time within from sixty to ninety days.

The militia comprises every able-bodied male between the ages of 18 and 45 who is, or has declared his intention to become, a citizen. Any one who has read the letters of General Washington of the "Military Policy of the United States," by General Upton, and has heeded the warnings of our regular officers must approve the action of Congress in passing, at the request of the Administration, the selective service law. Does it not bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of our citizens when they reflect that many of those who now rest under the crosses in Flanders fields might be with us today had they been given a fair fighting chance in the battles for our country? How many of our dead and maimed were lost through accident due to mistakes by untrained comrades?

The statistics of our new army, now becoming available, present some astounding figures. In an examination of 25 per cent. of the drafted men at thirteen camps 30.8 per cent. were found illiterate, and it was said that throughout the army a total of 24.9 per cent. of the men drafted were unable to read a newspaper, to write a letter home, or to read one they had received. Is this not a fine commentary and a scathing indictment of our system of compulsory education? Yet I have seen in the service a battalion of non-English-speaking men, from probably all the nations of the world, taught sufficient military English and soldiering to fit them for overseas service by alternating an hour of English instruction with an hour of drill eight hours daily for only three months.

In an examination of all drafted men 29 per cent. or 1,190,450 men were rejected as physically unfit for general military service. This bespeaks some method of compulsory physical training during adolescent years if the general health of the nation is to be conserved.

Instruction in hygiene is an absolute necessity. Universal military training is a necessity. To this can be added, as our military leaders are planning it, a system of elementary and intermediate education and vocational training. The feasibility of the plan was demonstrated during the war.

Unpreparedness has cost us in lives, in maimed bodies, in untold suffering and in dollars a terrible price. Is the price to be charged off to profit and loss with no further action?

It would seem that in inquiring into the conduct of the war at this time Congress is engaging in useless work, the sacrifice of life, the terrible cost in suffering, the dollars we have had to pay, and the failures we have met with having been only too ably foretold by our professional soldiers.

JOHN J. GORMAN.

OUR INDEPENDENCE SAFE.

Dr. Bell Sees No Need of League to Preserve It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I beg to inclose for your information a copy of my letter of July 29, declining membership in the "League for the Preservation of American Independence." As it is not likely that the recipient will care to publish it, you are at liberty to make such use of it as you desire.

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL.

Beinn Bhreagh, N. S., July 30, 1919.

[Inclosure.]

Henry A. Wise Wood, Secretary, League for the Preservation of American Independence, 1,133 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Sir: In reply to your communication of July 17 I may say that in my opinion there is absolutely no use in making any peace treaty with Germany unless a guarantee is provided to assure the carrying out of the peace terms. That guarantee is the organization of the League of Nations; and the covenant therefore should form an integral part of the Peace Treaty and not be separated from it and considered afterward as a separate proposition. The guarantee must be provided at the same time with the treaty itself.

The covenant is, of course, in the nature of a compromise, and, like all compromises, cannot be entirely satisfactory to all of the parties involved, but the covenant itself provides means for amendment after the League has been formed. This being so, I would strongly urge the ratification of the League of Nations covenant, without amendments or reservations that would delay peace or endanger the treaty by making necessary its resubmission to the signatory nations.

I must thank you for your invitation to join the "League for the Preservation of American Independence." The title appeals to me, for no one can be more anxious to preserve American independence than I am. But after examining with care your declaration of principles I am surprised to find that the association you ask me to join is not a league "for the preservation of American independence" at all, but simply represents a camouflaged attack on the constitution of the League of Nations, the noblest attempt yet made to bring about harmony and co-operation among the nations of the world in the interests of peace and civilization.

The declaration starts out with the absolutely false statement that the constitution of the League of Nations would deprive the American people "of basic liberties won by the Revolutionary War, or subsequently acquired, among which is their independence."

Having thus set up a man of straw, the attempt is made to knock him down by the organization of a league ostensibly for the preservation of "American Independence"—which is not threatened. So far from interfering with American independence, the constitution of the League of Nations attempts to extend to the whole world the principles of liberty and justice for which our fathers fought and for which we Americans stand.

I cannot conscientiously join your organization; and must urge with all the earnestness in my power that the constitution of the League of Nations be promptly ratified by Congress—and feel sure that this is the desire of the great majority of my fellow-citizens. Yours sincerely, (Signed)

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL.

LONGING EYES AMERICAWARD

Englishwomen of All Classes, High and Low, See Promise of 'Careers' on This Side the Atlantic

I'VE been thinking of going to America"—that is the rather indifferent sounding sentence that meets the American woman visiting in England. One detects, however, under the bored quality of the remark a really enthusiastic and vital interest in the land across the sea. And the reason for this is that to the Englishwoman America looks like a land of promise as far as opportunities for her life and her work go. To be sure, she may be wrong, and if she has the courage to go there she may meet with bitter disappointment. Still, her point of view remains.

The little slip of a girl who runs the lift in a large apartment house sits in the corner of her square car diligently studying from a tiny book and now and then making peculiar looking marks upon a surreptitious piece of paper. She is delving into the intricacies of shorthand, and inquiry shows that before she took upon her shoulders the task of running a lift she had served some one's meals from some one's kitchen. Rise No. I reported when she took on this present job. But now ambition has her in its grip, and she would go on to investigate the mysteries of the places where stenography is the open sesame to larger things. After days of "lifting" an American passenger up and down she turns a wide-eyed, questioning look in her direction and ventures, "What chance would a girl like me have in America?" Ensues a lively conversation and a confession of aspirations Americaward on the part of the one on the verge of being a stenographer. She has had her day made brighter by a graphic description of the land of promise.

Then, in a little old house, erected somewhere in William the Conqueror's time, sits a little old lady, surrounded by her goods and chattels of old family origin. She has been robbed of half her income by the high rate of war taxes and the prices of all the things she needs most have soared into the skies. She is discouraged about how her life is to proceed if these conditions are not alleviated. So, to the American caller, when the time is quite auspiciously ripe, she puts the same old question, dressed in different form: "Do you think I could live happily and at all within my means if I were to move to America?" That is a question rather harder to answer than the query of the girl on the lift.

An Englishwoman of fashion, who has spent much of her time in the past in America, collars the friend lately arrived from America and, drawing her into a private corner, she propounds this weighty problem: "Are clothes any cheaper in the United States than they are in London?" The truth will out—they are. "Well, I say," muses the Englishwoman, "it would be a novel idea, now, wouldn't it, to go to America to buy one's wardrobe for the year and thereby save one's passage money?" That is a rule which used to work in exactly the opposite direction.

A girl in a tailor shop—presser and cleaner—does an extremely fine job on a lot of American plants in an American skirt and then, when she delivers it back to its owner, her face burning with excitement, she stops a moment upon the threshold to stammer the fast becoming familiar sentence: "Do you think one of my ability could find work to do in America?" She goes on to explain a little: "You see, all the men are coming back, and in our business men can do the jobs just as well as we, and I'm sure I don't want to go on living without making any money for myself. There's my husband, of course. He doesn't very much like the idea of leaving England, but I think if I were to go over there and find something to do he might want to follow me after a year or so." A fine reversal that of the old system when papa used to seek the foreign land to make a place for his wife and family. But this lure of America and the ways of women there is too much even for an English inbred system.

Another one—an artist—had been in America during all the long war and at the first opportunity had rushed back to her beloved England. Oh, yes, she was willing to stay there forever, for she loved her native land and she was through with America forever. That was in May. Early in July she was seen to be haunting the British Customs, trying by hook or crook to get permission to go back to America. She was questioned very gently as to her change of attitude and mind, whereupon she admitted—a bit reluctantly—that one could do so much more with one's work, it seemed, in New York than one could in London. There wasn't more appreciation. Oh, dear no, but there was more sale. Same way with an actress. She had taken her way to the British Isles for the express purpose of marrying a British officer and of taking part in a production in London. But she wanted to get back, and she wanted it badly—much sooner than the boat was to sail. She, too, was after the rate of pay and, in her case, the appreciation of Americans (for she was an American) carried much weight.

At a hotel a perfect English maid such as is entirely extinct in America served breakfast to her American patron regularly every morning. She was as fresh as any Spring flower in her bright pink frock and her frilled apron, but a worm was eating at her young heart, for after many days she popped the fatal question: "If I should take service over to America do you think I could find employment after I got there?" Could she? It would be a shame to tell her how easily she could—providing she were willing to go on with her chosen profession. And this wonder in the realm was willing to go on being a servant. As soon as her "boy" came back from the front she was going to take him, then, and transport him to the bright and sparkling America, where it would be possible for her to add more to the family exchequer.

Two store clerks—shop assistants is the English word—sat at luncheon in a pastry shop. They had finished their cakes and tea and had come to the cigarette portion of their meal. "I say," said the blue-eyed one to the brown-eyed one, "my young man has enlisted for three years. I might as well go to America." "You wouldn't be doing so bad at that," replied her eager companion, who proceeded then to tell of the wonders of the store clerk's wage across the water. The beauty of that young man seemed visibly to grow dim and fade away, and in his honored place there began the growth of an ambition.

And, since the war, many competent women in England are assuming the management of hotels—doing everything which formerly only a man could be held responsible for. One of them, important of mein behind her desk, leaned across to the American customer to whisper, "Do you think there would be opportunity for the development of my sort of work in America?"

From the highest to the lowest, in all sets and classes of society among women, the question is being asked. It is all part of the effort at reconstruction at which the English have so much more work to do than the Americans. They may decide that "to stay at home is best," but this is what they are asking now and this is the way their minds are running. They have an idea that America is the happy hunting ground for women and they want to try their luck in the game.

NOTES ON CURRENT ART

THERE promises to be much of interest in the show of Batik art work which opens at the Bush Terminal Sales Building, 130 West Forty-second Street, on Tuesday, as one gets a pre-exhibition idea of it. It will undoubtedly be the best exhibition yet held of really fine examples of the work. A collection of old Batiks will be shown by Mme. Eva Gauthier, the work on cotton as it was originally done, and as worn by members of the royal families of Java. The Natural History Museum contributes its collection of Batik work, and the border of an announcement sent out for the exhibition is from a design used by courtesy of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. With the old-time Batiks of fine design on simple materials there will be shown all varieties of modern work—very beautiful panels by artists like Pieter Mijer, Arthur Crisp, and C. Bertram Hartman, working alone or together. In the interesting Greek friezes, "Music and the Dance," by Malthe Hasselriis, white on a blue background, the artist has achieved in the Batik the effect of roundness of the figure. The "North Wind," by the Javan Studies, shows the force and character in design that can be obtained with delightful combinations of color.

With these beautiful panels are shown all manner of things for utilitarian purposes in the way of house decoration and the most sumptuous things in materials for gowns, things which might well make the daughters of the Sultan of Java, who have worn the garments in the royal Batik collection, lose all the deep tones of their complexions in the pallor of envy. While a large part of the feminine world has been going on its way buying simpler and less expensive material for its gowns the Batik art has been making great strides and has really obtained a foothold outside of the few small shops and studios where it was first shown. The purpose of the present exhibition, which is one for buyers, is the very worthy and legitimate one of educating them in what is best in the recent development of this art so that in making their purchases, to disperse throughout the country, they may do it with taste and judgment. There are Batiks and Batiks. That the use of the Batik art is developing is shown in a large Fifth Avenue house, dealing in women's wearing apparel, which now carries a very full line of such stuff. One of the big department stores also carries them in a good variety and others are following the example. In the exhibition will be shown all sorts of gowns in Batik work and examples of Batik on silks and velvets for gowns and evening wraps. In these Ethel Wallace of New York has done some fine and original work in getting the artist's rather than the craftman's effect in her designs. A striking example shows chrysanthemums on velvet and makes a material which could be used as a wrap for an Empress. Velvet of a rose shade with a simple pale craftsman design will make up with white fur for an evening wrap and a dark velvet with Batik design is shown made up with dark fur in a conventional frock. It all goes to show how the art of the Museum may be brought into daily use. There are gowns of soft material in straight, simple lines, with design of Batik made at the Noank Studio by Ruth Green Harris and Katherine Forest, having the clinging lines affected by Nazimova, who is a devotee of the Batik art. A sculptor, Miss Mary Klauber, is designing a Batik gown in orchid shades, a velvet jacket and chiffon skirt, which will be worn by Miss Maude E. Woodruff, who has assembled the collection, on the opening evening. The buyers whose taste is to be educated in the art will not find the field for their fancy limited.

The Milch Galleries, where the flag pictures of Childe Hassam make a procession by themselves, twenty-two of them around the walls, have had large numbers of visitors from all parts of the country, from States as far West as California, who have come not only to see the Hassam flag pictures, of which so much has been said, but to get a second-hand notion of how New York looked in gala dress for her various parades and celebrations.

A collection of paintings is shown in connection with the exhibition of industrial art at the Pennsylvania Hotel, where France is telling America what wares she has to present and is working to open up trade between the two countries. The art exhibition is an aesthetic addition to the exhibition, but it is interesting. Two large old flower pictures are typical. Looming large in the centre of each picture are the entwined "L's" and the crown of Louis XIV. A small picture of interest is "Marie Antoinette au Temple," the unhappy Queen in black and white, with large cap. A charming small portrait, which is credited to Sir Thomas Lawrence, a water color, shows a sweet-faced young woman with white embroidered capes and blue ribbon and neck and waist. An old water color is after that quaint old picture of Watteau, "The Ensign of Gersaint," the original of which is in the Louvre and a replica at Potsdam. A large, attractive portrait, "Mrs. Higginson and Son," is credited to John Russell.

Book illustrations and decorations by members of the Art Alliance and co-operating publishers are being shown in the galleries of the Art Alliance of America, 10 East Forty-seventh Street. Of the former there are preliminary sketches by Albert Sterner, with the finished work of Arthur Keller and Howard Giles. Charles Dana Gibson is represented by a group of pen-and-ink drawings. Wood-block prints are shown by Tod Lindenmuth. Publishers have sent originals and reproductions from popular books and magazines, including color work by Alfred James Dewey, Herbert Paus, William Van Dresser, and N. C. Wyeth. There are black and whites by John Barbour, F. T. Chapman, J. C. Coll, F. G. Cooper, C. B. Falls, Arthur Finley, John Held, Jr., J. Henry, G. W. Planke, Henry Raleigh, and R. A. Weed. The exhibition is open to the public daily, except Saturday and Sunday, from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., to Sept. 20.

THE FLASK OF FORTUNATUS

FLUCTUATIONS IN DRINK PRICES.

Drinks. (Quarts.)	1914.	1919.	Increase.
Scotch whisky, (common)	$ .90	$4.00	$3.10
Scotch, (fancy case goods)	1.25	7.00	5.75
Rye, (common)	.75	2.50	1.75
Rye, (fancy brands)	1.25	4.00	2.75
Gin, (case goods)	1.00	2.75	1.75
Vermouth, (Italian)	.75	2.00	1.25
Vermouth, (French)	1.00	2.50	1.50
Brandy, (common)	1.25	5.00	3.75
Brandy, (first proof)	2.50	15.00	12.50
Champagne, (common)	3.25	12.00	8.75
Champagne, (vintages)	7.00	20.00	13.00

FORTUNE turned rye and corn into an elixir of gold for many a man in the final days of the strong-drink traffic. To some the foresight of having purchased whiskies and wines before the coming of the European war brought hundreds of thousands of dollars, while many a thrifty retailer cashed his cellar into a treasure trove and got out of the business with enough to keep him in comfort the rest of his life.

Whisky had been more highly taxed than any other drink. In scanning the prices in the days of the passing of the trade, it must be remembered that for every gallon of spirits sold the Government got $6.40.

Consider, for instance, the case of a certain wholesale dealer who before the war laid in a stock of 100,000 gallons of the spirits used in rectifying and fortifying. He bought at 70 cents a gallon, which made an initial cost of $70,000. In the payment of the taxes he was entitled to a rebate of one gallon on every container of forty gallons at the end of two months. By storing away his spirits four years ago he was entitled to a maximum deduction for leakage and evaporation at the rate of nine gallons and a half, or about one-quarter. His tax then on 75,000 gallons was $480,000. This gave him approximately 75,000 gallons, which had cost him $350,000. He had intended to make a killing at $15 a gallon, but it is generally understood that he got $11.25 a gallon for the product, which amounted to $843,750, or a gross profit of $293,750.

Although many of the retail dealers have been making enormous gains, it must also be borne in mind that some of them had to buy liquors and wines at exorbitant rates to fill their orders. As a very good whisky can be distilled for 50 cents a gallon, and 60 cents is a high cost of manufacture, the margin of profit for well-stocked dealers and distillers has been large. Add to good whisky the cost of cooperage, the storing for three or four years until it has reached a potable mellowness, the interest on the investment, the loss from leakage, (which is often more than the maximum allowed by the Government,) and one may approximate the profits likely to have been made by the men who had the capital to hold out for the high prices.

The average bottle of whisky contains a pint and a half, a standard case of twelve bottles having a content of two and one-fifth gallons. Some brands are put up in full quarts. For example, take the common or so-called quart as a basis for calculation. A fair quality of rye whisky could be had for $2.50 a bottle, or $13.83 a gallon. The main items of cost were the 50 cents which it cost to distill it and the $6.40 tax, amounting to $6.90. Add all the other factors and there was still a considerable margin of profit for the dealer who managed to get hold of the goods before grain was high.

American whiskies bought before the war in the so-called quarts at from $1 to $1.25 recently brought from $2.50 to $3 for the same quantity. The consumer was paying for standard brands from $33 to $36 a case in June, as contrasted with a pre-war price of $12 to $15 a case. Three barrels of whisky at $12 a quart were sold by a noted Fifth Avenue restaurant. The original cost was $3.50 a gallon in those halcyon days when the internal revenue tax was only $1.10 a gallon.

The largest profits, however, were made by the dealers who got control of fancy imported whiskies at an early stage of the war. One of them held fast to 2,000 cases of Scotch, which he sold out not long ago at $80 a case. At the time he bought it this could be sold at a profit for $18. Many a man has been paying $7 to $8 a bottle for his favorite brand of Scotch or Irish. It cost $21 a case to get Scotch whisky out of the Government warehouses the last week it could be sold, which shows that when the dealer was asking from $48 to $50 a case for it there was not much of a basis of profit.

The few bottles of French champagne in club cellars or in the stores of large hotels sold at extravagant figures. Many a champagne of no great distinction in vintage brought $15 and $20 a bottle at hotels and restaurants, and often more was obtained. The forbidding of the exportation of these wines by France added to the scarcity. So great was the demand that some restaurateurs got $5 to $7 a bottle for American champagnes which had sold for only $2 a bottle.

The standard brandies distilled from wines in the Cognac district of France were offered at $52 the case. The liqueurs showed the highest increase. Russian kümmel was quoted at $100 the case and some sales were made at $10 to $15 the bottle. Benedictine was sold at from $100 to $125 the case of twelve bottles or about $50 the gallon. Such cordials as curacao, maraschino, creme de menthe, and anisette were offered at $45 the case.

There were colossal deals in intoxicants as July 1 approached. Special vaults connected with subterranean passages and protected by secret doors are said to have been built. How much unsold wine and liquor may remain in the country is a matter of conjecture. There are vast quantities of wines still in California cellars, despite the fact that even the laborers, many of whom are Italians, have been buying for future use four or five barrels each. Many millions of gallons of beverages are undoubtedly left in the stores and cellars of the merchants, judging from the returns which are obtained by canvasses of the trade. A recent statement from Washington said that 50,000,000 gallons of spirits were still in bonded warehouses. The loss of revenue from that source alone would represent more than $300,000,000 to the Government.

HOME DRINKS WITH A "KICK"

IN the course of the recent prohibition discussions in the House of Representatives, official records were introduced to show the highly intoxicating effects of beverages which could be easily made in the home. Representative Julius Kahn of California, asked the "dry" advocates:

"Do you propose to write a law which will submit your mothers, your sisters, your wives, and the wives of the farmers of this country to be haled to jail for violating this drastic law?"

He introduced a letter written by the Acting Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY,
Washington, D. C., July 15, 1919.

Hon. Julius Kahn, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In response to your telephonic request of July 14, the following data on the alcoholic content of the beverages mentioned are given. A list of references is also appended. Reference to this list is made by number under the headings given below. These beverages as made in the home vary according to the formula used. It is generally true that the formulas used in the home are quite variable, so that the alcohol content given must necessarily be approximate.

Hard cider: The alcoholic content of the undiluted, fermented juice of cider apples may run as high as 8 per cent. by volume (8). This alcohol content is produced by fermentation of sugar naturally present in the apples. Adulterated ciders have been analyzed in the bureau which ran as high as 10 per cent. alcohol by volume and over (11.) This excessive alcohol was produced by added sugar before fermentation.

Elderberry wine: As made in the home this article varies much in alcohol content, depending on the formula used. The natural sugar of the berries (4 to 6 per cent. sugar) is deficient for wine-making purposes. Sugar is therefore added in varying amounts. In addition to the alcohol produced by the fermentation of the sugar naturally present in the berries and the sugar added, most of the formulas call for an addition of alcohol or brandy (4, 5, and 9.) By fermenting natural elderberry juice only about 3 per cent. alcohol by volume would be formed (8.) This content is increased by fermenting added sugar and by the addition of alcohol. An approximation of the alcohol content of most elderberry wines would be from 7 to 20 per cent. by volume.

Blackberry cordial: As made in the home this product may be fermented or may depend entirely on added alcohol, according to the formula used. The product as made by the formula given in the National Formulary, 1916, Page 7, is recognized as the official formula (10.) This formula would yield a beverage with an alcohol content varying from 20 to 30 per cent. by volume. If, however, the alcohol content is dependent on the fermentation of the natural juice of the blackberry, the alcohol content would be 3 to 5 per cent. by volume. This is usually augmented by fermentation of added sugar or a straight addition of alcohol in some form.

Cherry bounce: This class of beverage is made from fruit or juice with rum added (1) or by adding alcohol or brandy to alternate layers of crushed fruit and sugar. As generally made it is not fermented. If it depended on the natural sugar content of cherries for its alcohol content, only about 4 to 7 per cent. alcohol would be produced. Its alcohol content therefore, depends on the extent to which the added alcohol is diluted by the fruit juice. Cherry bounce varies in alcohol content between the approximate range of 30 to 40 per cent. by volume.

Peach bounce: This article is made in practically the same manner as cherry bounce, and the alcohol content when made as above would be about the same.

As general information, it may be stated that sugar will produce, when completely fermented, approximately one-half of its weight of alcohol. By complete fermentation of sugar only about 16 per cent. by volume of alcohol can be produced. In order, therefore, to make a beverage containing more than 16 per cent. by volume of alcohol it is necessary to add alcohol, usually in the form of a distillate. The production of alcohol from natural fruit is limited by the sugar content of the juice of the fruit, which may be augmented, first, by the addition of sugar, and, secondly, by the addition of alcohol.

Respectfully,

P. B. DUNBAR, Acting Chief.

The Mark of The New Velie Six

Fix this new name-plate in your mind. You have never seen it before. But will see it in rapidly increasing numbers within a short time.

This is the mark of the new Velie Six—new from the radiator name-plate to the filler cap on the rear tank.

We will not tell you today of its beautiful, new type body; of its entirely new appearance of hood and cowl; of its wonderful new type motor of surpassing power and flexibility; of its lamps of interesting shape and fenders of marked distinction. Detailed story will be out soon.

Even half a century ago the name Velie stood for the best of manufactured products. Today a mile of Velie factory is working at top speed endeavoring to keep pace with an ever-increasing demand. Velie inspires confidence.

The Most Important Document in History!

The U. S. Senate has been considering for five months the German Treaty. The Foreign Relations Committee required two weeks to read it. It is being discussed by every other Government on earth. It may be weeks before it is finally disposed of.

Meanwhile what does the intelligent man or woman think of it? How can American public opinion express itself unless it knows precisely what is in the treaty?

Where can the treaty be seen?—that is, the full treaty, just as it was signed, just as it now reposes in the archives of the French Republic, with maps?

There is only one publication in America that has printed the treaty in this complete form, together with League of Nations Covenant and the Labor Clauses.

That publication is August Current History Magazine, the monthly periodical published by The New York Times Company. It is now on sale on newsstands for 25 cents.

The August issue also contains:

The Treaty Creating the New Polish State (with its important clauses relating to the protection of religious and racial minorities), also

The Franco-American-British Alliance in textual form.

In the August issue of Current History there is also printed a complete, consecutive, thrilling account of how the agreement was finally reached, the signing of the document, its ratification by Germany, and the full text of the declarations regarding it by President Wilson, Secretary Lansing, Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George.

The August Current History Magazine contains also a survey of important happenings during July in the chief nations of the world, with special accounts of the month's phases in Russia, Poland, Germany, Greece, Italy, Czechoslovakia, and the United States.

The illustrations in the August number are in rotogravure, and portray the historic signing of the treaty and other events of permanent, historical interest.

There are 18 cartoons by artists of reputation on international events.

Current History Magazine differs from other review periodicals in that it omits Editorial Comment. It gives the authentic facts based on official records—the reader is permitted to put his own interpretation on these facts and reach his own conclusions without having any opinions of the magazine thrust upon him.

FOR SINGLE AIR CONTROL

Senator New Argues That Army, Navy and Postal Combination Is Necessary and Inevitable

SENATOR HARRY S. NEW of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs has written for U. S. Air Service, the official publication of the Army and Navy Air Service Association, in Washington, what may be regarded as the answer to the recent article by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, asserting that the American air problem and program have nothing in common with the ambitious British projects in that direction. Mr. Roosevelt's article, reprinted in THE TIMES from U. S. Air Service, denounced as impracticable and unwise the proposed combination of the Army, Navy, and Postal Air Services under one head. Senator New takes precisely the opposite view, and points to the example of England as the model for us to follow if we do not desire to be left behind in the inevitable competition in a new field of magnificent possibilities and promise.

He says:

"The last report of the British Air Ministry discloses to the world the fact that Great Britain has had the vision to comprehend not only the possibilities but the certainties of aeronautics and is determined to derive for England all the benefits that they afford. Of course it is known to those in the air service of the Government and the comparatively small public which has kept informed that England, for instance, has appropriated $350,000,000 for aeronautical equipment and experimentation for the next fiscal year. The people of our country as a class know nothing of it and I fear have no conception of the real meaning of this fact. I am more concerned with the commercial future of aeronautics than I am concerned with it as a purely military arm; for it is in the commercial field that its greatest development is next to occur. I believe that the next war will be brought to a very quick decision by that power which is best equipped with aeronautical devices.

"The United States appropriated $25,000,000 for her navy and $25,000,000 for her army for the purpose of aviation, which includes expenditures of every kind and will really provide for very little in the way of equipment. As I have said, the great progress to be expected is in the near future along commercial lines. Great Britain is projecting mail and express routes all over the world, from London to the Continent, London to South Africa, London to India, London to Brazil. Similar programs are planned for Australia, New Zealand, and Canada. Many lines are being put into operation in Europe, France, England, Spain, and Germany. There is no longer any question that airships of various types will be employed to a very considerable extent in the transportation of mails, express and passengers—to what an extent, nobody can foresee, and only the future can determine. The only question now is: How far behind the other nations will the United States start? Having created these agencies, shall she permit herself to be completely outclassed in their development and utilization.

"I believe that the question is one of very great importance to the country, sufficient in fact to call for the creation of a single department of the Government to look after it to the exclusion of everything else. Great Britain was forced to the adoption of this eighteen months or more ago, and so was France. The United States should do likewise, and sooner or later she must do it. It is merely a question of whether she will do it now and take advantage of the present opportunity to get ahead or whether she will wait until forced to do what other nations have done and then attempt to come from behind with the same old American disregard of expense and lack of appreciation of the wisdom of preparedness.

"Remember that I am not speaking from the military viewpoint alone, but from the commercial viewpoint as well. England, France, and Italy are today represented by agents in almost every country in the world who have been sent directly from their home lands to interest other Governments and other people in their respective types of aeronautical machines. In many cases they have given machines free to Governments and private companies in order to get them started in their use and thereby acquire them as eager customers, while the United States, which gave these agencies to the world, sits back complacently to see this trade and credit claimed by other nations.

"I know that there is opposition to the separate department plan on the part of the navy. There is also opposition in certain army quarters, but this is the result of selfishness and a disregard of the interests of aeronautics in its broad and general sense. The navy is concededly competent to look after its own aeronautical needs. So likewise is the army. But neither of them can go beyond their own service. It will not be long—in fact the day is here—when other departments of the Government will be clamoring for aircraft.

"The first thing necessary to the use of the airplane of any type is landing fields. These must be established at frequent intervals all over the country. In the very nature of things, the navy can't do this. What does the navy know and what can it do with reference to commercial development?

"In the appropriation bill which has just passed Congress the army asked for $83,000,000 for aviation; the navy asked for $45,000,000. From these two sources come requisitions that in many instances duplicate each other.

"I am in position to know that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate had not the slightest idea of what the $45,000,000 asked for by the navy was designed to cover, while the members of the Naval Affairs Committee had no more knowledge of what the army's requisitions were for, and neither committee knew that in addition to these were requisitions for about $10,000,000 more to be employed in connection with coast fortifications which went directly to the Committee on Appropriations. All of these estimates should go to one committee and should be made by one department to which the needs of the navy, army, the Post Office, the Land Department, Treasury Department and all the other numerous Government agencies which either have present need for planes or are going to find need for them in the immediate future should be submitted, digested and put before Congress in one perfected and consolidated statement. It is the only means in the world by which duplication can be prevented and expenditures economically and wisely regulated."

"The attempt to create such a department may be successfully resisted for a time—although I honestly believe that Congress will be wise enough to discount bureau jealousies and do the obviously sensible thing at this session—but whether it does or not, it cannot be long deferred. The only thing that can possibly accrue from a delay is to place the United States at a continued disadvantage from both the scientific and financial standpoints.

"No man knows what is to be the future of aeronautics. A few years ago the world laughed at Langley. The United States was so niggardly in its treatment of the Wright brothers that they left this country and established their fields at Le Mans, France, where they could get better attention and more liberal treatment. The marvelous development of the science can be best appreciated when we stop to think that the first man to fly, Orville Wright, is today but 48 years old. What would the world have thought a generation ago of one who expressed belief that a man could fly across the Atlantic in a heavier than air machine in sixteen hours?

"Commander Read of NC-4 fame said the other day that a person who would say today that a man might not attain an altitude of 60,000 feet and might not fly from New York to London and back in the course of a single day would be rash. But that the development of the airplane is at least to closely parallel that of the automobile is just as certain as that the limousines of this era have supplanted the original high-wheeled horseless carriages of the early nineties. Shall America realise all this and shape her aims accordingly in time to keep abreast of other nations or shall we be permitted to bring up the straggling rear of a rapidly moving procession?

"That is the question to be answered by Congress and the people."

AMERICA'S WAR INDEBTEDNESS

By DAVID F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

THE nation's debt is said to be $26,000,000,000 or more. About $10,000,000,000 of it represents loans to foreign Governments, which is a claim on their wealth and will be repaid with interest. The remaining sum is huge. It is a third of the total pre-war estimated wealth of a nation like France. Does it represent so much absolute abstraction of wealth from this country? Has that much of the nation's wealth been blown into the air? Is the nation poorer by that amount?

We have used vast quantities of coal, of iron, and its manufactured products, of lumber, and other materials. Much of it is a total permanent loss. It cannot be recovered. A very large part of it, however, which has gone into camps and aviation fields, Government buildings, ships, naval vessels, trucks, ordnance and Government plants, such as nitrate and munition plants, has been conserved and will be a great asset. There was an increase in production and much saving. During the war labor was highly organized and strenuously utilized. The nation conserved as never before. The end of the war finds us with perhaps more wealth than when we entered it. We have as much land as ever, more of it in cultivation, and most of it as well cultivated as in normal times. We have more of all the leading classes of live stock. Work animals increased by over a million and a half, cattle by six millions, dairy cows by two and three-quarter millions, and swine by fourteen millions. We have as many railroads and have them in about as good condition as when the war broke out; as many electric lines in as good condition, as many factories, perhaps as well equipped; more residences and apartments; as many office buildings; and many more ships. Our banking resources have largely increased. A considerable part of the increase probably appears as a result of inflation, but undoubtedly there is an actual increase even on the pre-war money value basis.

No one should infer that war does not impose burdens or that it is a good thing economically. * * * The setting up of credit relations and the readjustment of wealth holdings by individuals due to loans and to unusual taxes produced adverse economic conditions, as will also the reverse process involved in the transfer of wealth by continued high taxes from all the people to the minority that made its wealth available to the Government for war purposes. This process will extend over a long period and will at least produce many psychological disturbances, as well as many individual hardships.

However, this nation is growing rapidly in population and in wealth. It gained a population of 24,000,000 between 1900 and 1915. It has probably gained 4,300,000 since the breaking out of the European war. Its banking resources increased from about ten billions in 1900 to nineteen billions in 1915. These have greatly increased during the war. We are doubtless gaining 800,000 a year from natural increase. The annual increase will probably be greater from now on without larger population. There will also be additions to the population, perhaps not so large as formerly, through immigration.

This nation will be in a better position to effect the liquidation of the debt—that is, the transfer of wealth, with interest, from all to some, and to make industrial advances—than any other in the world. It can meet any reasonable domestic and foreign financial demands if our people will work and save, especially as they worked and saved during the war.

Studebaker

THE NEW BIG-SIX

A WILLING and never-failing 60-horse-power motor drives this new Studebaker easily on high gear and without effort, at two miles an hour or a mile-a-minute.

Its 126-inch wheelbase, with perfectly balanced chassis, gives to this car riding qualities that are truly remarkable.

Cord tires and shock absorbers are standard equipment. Upholstery is genuine hand-buffed leather. Silver-faced speedometer and jeweled 8-day clock are mounted on circassian walnut-finished instrument board.

Studebaker owners in the metropolitan district will receive prompt, painstaking attention at all times—the new Service and Repair Station, 219-23 W. 77th St. assures just that.

KING "8"

Two Custom-made Body Models

THE SEDANETTE, a comfortable four-passenger car built on the standard King chassis offers the convenient all-weather features of a Sedan with the compactness of a Roadster.

The top folds completely back; all plate glass windows may be instantly lowered, and the remaining frame work stored in an especially designed compartment at the rear of the driver's seat.

For doctors, contractors, professional men and especially for ladies, this handsome model has no superior for those desiring a small car for year 'round service.

THE LIMOUDAN is a distinctive seven-passenger closed car, combining the privacy and luxury of a Limousine with the owner-driver sociability and fair-weather convertible features of a Sedan.

All windows, and the glass division at the rear of the driver's seat may be easily lowered from inside the car.

Several of these special body models are now ready for immediate delivery. To be sure of one, order at once. Only a limited number of these cars will be produced this year and orders should be placed early for seasonable delivery.

SCHOOL OF FIFTEEN NATIONS

Women of Foreign Origin Being Trained for Y. W. C. A. Work

FORTY women, of fifteen different nationalities, only eight of whom were born in this country, are members of a very remarkable school which is housed in four old-time houses in East Fifty-third Street, and which opened this month. It is one of the latest and biggest undertakings of the National War Work Council of the Young Women's Christian Association.

It is called a "school to train workers for old country service." The experiment is new and the work is being followed with greatest interest in educational circles. It was begun so quietly that so far not a word has been written about it since the call for students was issued in the foreign press of the country.

The germ which the school developed was the work of the training of the Polish Grey Samaritans, which was done earlier in these same buildings under the auspices of the War Work Council and the Polish Reconstruction Committee, whose head was Mme. Laura de Turczynowicz, the author of "When the Prussians Came to Poland."

There had been a request from the Poles of this country for women of their own nationality to go as trained workers to Poland. The women were trained, and already twenty of them have gone to the other side and others will follow later. After this, people of other nationalities began to ask why, when the need in their countries was practically as great, they could not have their own women trained over here to go home and help in the reconstruction work.

The Council welcomed the idea. It was in a position, too, to carry it out. The leases on the buildings which had been used for the training work of the Polish women had still some time to run, there was a certain amount of money that could be used for the purpose, more was immediately voted and notices sent out that scholarships would be given to suitable women who cared to take a Summer course and fit themselves for service for a term of years, each in the country of her nativity or descent. The forty pupils now in the school which opened July 5 was the answer. The forty are working under Miss Elsa Butler, a young woman of broad experience, who is the Dean of the school.

To join the school each woman must be foreign born or at least of the second generation of those born on the other side, so that she may understand the conditions and be in sympathy with the people with whom she is to work. No one under 21 is taken. Each must have had a high school education or its equivalent, speak and read English and the language of her nativity with fluency, be in good physical condition, and without dependents.

Notwithstanding the heterogeneous character of this collection of nationalities, the school work is going on with remarkable harmony. Tolerance is one of the things not on the formal curriculum, which it is nevertheless the aim of the school to bring about, but it has not been necessary to lay emphasis upon it. Three of the buildings are being used for dormitories, the rooms accommodating four students. The effort was made, however, not to bring together women whose countries had been made enemies by the war. When discussion in the classes and at table becomes warm and earnest it is, usually, from the interest, it is found, of one nationality in the other and in their habits and customs.

All the women consider themselves good Americans with a natural special interest in the country on the other side from which they spring. The bringing together of so many nationalities has been a revelation to them. Previously they had thought of America and themselves, their own particular people, and it is interesting to them to realize that there are Americans and many other peoples. All of the classes are taught in English.

The general purpose of the training is to fit the pupils to adapt social principles to conditions abroad. Pedagogy, in so far as it applies to methods of elementary education, is one of the required studies, since it is thought that this will be one of the essential needs of the workers on the other side. They are taught something of organization and leadership as it applies to work with children in the educational and recreational fields. They study the industrial and economic history of women and health education, including the Red Cross course in home hygiene, unless they have previously received a certificate, when they may take an elective course in medical social problems. This Red Cross course, with the additional work which may be taken outside of 240 hours of hospital work, will fit them to be nurses' aids.

There are also health lectures, with particular attention given to conditions overseas, and discussion of topics of infant welfare, care of the mother before and after the birth of her child, contagious diseases, the practical knowledge that every board of health wishes to instill in every household.

With the social work, of which the theory is given, there are observation and institutional visiting of day nurseries, &c. There is instruction in systematized housekeeping, which is work on broad lines, looking after the finances of the house, the keeping of accounts, budget making, seeing after the sanitary conditions, plumbing, &c. The domestic science course, with work in home cooking, is a branch which is considered of great importance to members of the school staff.

"It will do them very little good to teach them to make soups, salad dressings and puddings; they probably all of them know that. What we want to give is a knowledge of a proper diet to preserve the health," says Miss Butler. "We are very eager to have them keep their knowledge of the cooking of their own national dishes. One of the things to which we are looking forward with the greatest interest is the class in cooking in which each student will prepare a dinner of her own national dishes. Then—and this is the part in which we are anxious to obtain results—following the cooking of the national dishes, in which every effort will be made to obtain the exact materials that would be used in the old countries, the students are to prepare a second meal, using American substitutes with an effort to bring about practically the same results.

"In many countries, take Poland for instance, there is a great lack of food materials of all kinds. All the countries are looking to America to supply these deficiencies. Naturally, we can only send the things that we raise. If the old country workers who go over from here understand preparing palatable native dishes with substitutes it will be of great value to them. In the first section of the cooking class where this is to be tried there will be seven different nationalities working, and others in following sections of the class.

"Here are some of the dishes cooked at the first meeting of the class: Dolmi was an Armenian dish prepared by placing in a dish a layer of stuffed cabbage leaves, above this a layer of stuffed grape leaves and on top stuffed tomatoes, the whole baked with a tomato sauce. Chopped meat was used as a stuffing. A blonde, Finnish girl, from quite the other side of Europe, prepared a dish not dissimilar, which was called simply 'Cabbage Rolls'—cabbage leaves stuffing. A blonde Finnish girl, from baked. France, too, used cabbage leaves in 'Peppers Creole,' stuffed peppers, stuffed cabbage leaves cooked with a little garlic, onion, and tomato.

"Bulgaria showed how good a stew could be in 'Mousaka,' made with chopped meat, eggplant, green pepper, tomato, onion, and salt, and having not the slightest resemblance in taste to any other dish. Greece prepared a 'Bean Stew,' with green string beans, chopped lamb, tomato, and lemon juice, and it was pronounced delicious. It was economical, there being only half a cup of meat to a quart of beans, and it would serve five people. The Greeks and Armenians made use of lemon juice in many dishes. 'Bulgour Pilaf,' made by an Armenian, was of cracked wheat, lamb, onion, and butter, and was served with Matdzoon prepared on the spot. In another lesson there will be given demonstrations in preparing the Polish 'Strucel,' Czechoslovak 'Schkubanky,' Lithuanian 'Kapustai,' Moravian 'Omoicka,' and the genuine way of preparing Milanese spaghetti will be demonstrated among other national dishes.

"The value of native workers in a country cannot be underestimated. We see it in this country. I know of one case in a hospital where there were a number of Jewish women in the maternity ward. There were some of them whose babies had not arrived and others who were nursing their babies, and all of them needed to be well nourished, but it was Passover Week, and they steadily refused to take the hospital food that was offered them. Finally a Jewish nurse was called in to solve the dilemma. She went out and found some matzos in which there was egg, and the women ate that gladly and obtained the necessary nourishment.

"While the council provides the scholarships for the students, we do not send them abroad. They will do that by their own efforts through representatives of their different nationalities. If there are any who do not go they will be able to do a valuable work among their own people here."

Rural problems, a subject which is one of the elective studies, is one that they will be likely to meet abroad, and they are treated in relation to recreation, religion, schools, and health conditions, which are more difficult problems than in the large cities, because of isolation and lack of interest. Handiwork for children is included in a study of arts and crafts; there is storytelling for those who wish it. Folk dancing is elective, but most of the students take it, and community singing with special attention given to the folk songs of the different nationalities. This course is given with the intenton of developng group leadership.

The scholarships given the students, and without which they would not have been able to attend the school, are generous. They include traveling expenses to and from the school, tuition, board and rooms, and a certain sum for general expenses, books, carfares, &c.

There are four married women among the students. One of these is a Bulgarian, whose husband, a Presbyterian minister, was educated at Roberts College, Constantinople. She will return to her native land with her husband, and this course will make her work in aiding him more effective. She has two children who will return with their parents. She was educated at the Girls' College in Constantinople, being one of the few pupils who went entirely through the school course beginning with the kindergarten, and is a woman of unusual intelligence. Other married women are a Pole and a Hungarian who will go to their respective countries as soon as the school closes, and a Norwegian woman, who will return to her country to do social work.

CITY COLLEGE AIR SCHOOL

EXIGENCIES of the war evolved new ideals and developed new methods in education more swiftly and more radically perhaps than in any other field affected in the endeavor to gain an overwhelming victory. The effect upon education for the ordinary mechanic trades has been spread abroad, but the direct effect upon public education in the newest of all fields, that of the airplane at as close range as the College of the City of New York is striking.

From an essentially classical college in 1911 the City College has been transformed to an institution for the training of citizens who well may take the ephebic oath of allegiance and service to the city. The impulse first came from John H. Finley, then President of the college, and now State Commissioner of Education. It began with the offer to establish any course in the evening session that might be requested by a group of city employees. The latest evidence of this transformation is the establishment of practical and theoretical courses in aeronautics, a course in the motor cycle, and classes in automobile instruction for men and women.

All three of these have grown out of the orthodox academic engineering work under the driving influence of the war. As for the airplane course, the most important fact is that once it was established in the heat of martial preparation it did not die, for, so far as known, it is the sole surviving public ground school for flying in the country. While the others went out with the coming in of the armistice, the City College School continued in its work. Here men are prepared for the flying schools, for employment with the aircraft and motor companies, and for positions as draftsmen, designers, and aeronautical engineers. In the laboratories is $100,000 worth of equipment, engines, fuselages, propellers, and airfoils. It is with these that the men get the most practical kind of training. The engines must be made to go, and one of the favorite exercises is "trouble shooting," in which the instructor almost literally throws a monkey wrench into the works and makes the pupils haul it out again.

Among the students in the airplane course are boys from fifteen different universities, from various high schools, and from factories everywhere. The apparatus in the various laboratories was donated partly by private individuals and companies, but much of it by the Government through the interest of Bernard M. Baruch, head of the War Trade Board and an alumnus and trustee of the college.

Here and there in the Mechanic Arts Building on the hill at Convent Avenue and 139th Street, tucked away in odd corners, are airplanes that have flown and show the scars of service. Disassembled, so as to show every detail of construction, is the famous Italian S. I. A., which made the historical flight from Turin to London. This was presented to the college by the Italian High Commission. Different types of airplane engines are set up ready for operation, varying in power from 50 to 350 horse power.

In the courses in drafting and design the problem is attacked from two angles. First, the probable performance of a machine is calculated from a given design—its speed range, climb, lift, and gliding angle can all be predicted to a very fine point of accuracy. Then the reverse problem is worked out by designing a machine which will respond to a desired performance. Each student, before he finishes the course, must submit an original design to meet the conditions presented to him.

While the courses in airplane mechanics and design are especially applicable to the technician, the automobile course is especially designed for owners, prospective owners, salesmen, garage men, chauffeur-mechanics; and includes lectures, laboratory instruction, and outdoor driving lessons. A leaf has been taken from the notebook of the army instructors, who soon discovered that with intensive training of short duration just as efficient results could be obtained as in a long, scattering course. So the time of instruction is limited to eight weeks and a total of seventy-two hours of actual instruction. The fee to the student covers only the actual cost, as all the equipment has been loaned or donated by the manufacturers. All the types of engine are represented in cut-away or sectionalized models. Outdoor individual driving lessons in actual operation are included, and when the student graduates he is ready to pass the examination for a State license.

The President of the college, Sidney E. Mezes, who has just returned from Paris as head of the staff of technical advisers to the American Commissioners, said:

"A potent factor in our success that came as a surprise to many was the indispensable aid of business—private business we call it—and of men and women with no official station. It was a war of nations, not merely of armies and navies. Banks, railways, mines, the engineering profession, farms, labor, the middlemen, homes contributed; all these and many more were essential. The war brought this out; it is as much a fact in peace, though disclosed only to the discerning few like Thomas Carlyle, the apostle of work, who spoke of the bad carpenter as shattering the Decalogue with every stroke of his hammer.

"The distinction between public service and private business has shown itself to be convenient, but by no means fundamental. Every man and woman who works usefully and well is a worthy public servant. To train any workers to work and live with skill and responsibility is a public service. Quite as important to our people as cultivated fields are cultivated workers. And the cultivation of men is the business of a college."

BELGIUM DEFORESTED BY HUN

Germans Wiped Out All but a Few Areas of Wooded Land

Editor of American Forestry Magazine.

The Germans practically destroyed the forests of Belgium during their four years' occupation of the conquered territory. A few small areas of wooded land still remain, but the trees are standing only because the Germans in their hurried retreat followed by their speedy acceptance of the armistice found insufficient time in which to complete their work of destruction.

Several hundred million dollars' worth of trees were destroyed, and the four provinces of Hainaut, Liege, Luxemburg and Namur suffered most severely.

Protests against the wholesale destruction of standing timber, and the deliberate damage of young growth so that it could not survive were made to General Baron von Bissing, Governor General of Belgium, by the Belgian Forest Administration and by the Central Forestry Society of Belgium, without avail, and the systematic and scientific destruction of the forests and woodlands continued during the entire period of the occupation.

Belgium's forest area, 1,299,450 acres, constituted about 17 per cent. of the entire area of the country, whereas one-fourth of the German Empire and one-third of Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtemberg and Baden is in forest. As Belgium is without doubt one of the heaviest lumber consuming nations of the world, in view of the density of her population and the needs of her industries, these German forests will undoubtedly be compelled to restore the lumber Belgium has lost, but only the long years can restore her forests. Meanwhile, the effect of changes of climate due to loss of her forests may cause damage impossible to estimate, to add to the many injuries already sustained by this unhappy country.

The situation is well expressed by a report of the Central Forestry Association of Belgium, of which Count Visart de Bocarme, the heroic Mayor of Bruges, is President, which says: "In 1914 the wind of Liberty still blew in the rich foliage of our forests, which were, alas! soon to become acquainted with the axe of the vandals. For, during that dark period of fifty-two months, after committing every manner of crime, they also perpetrated the monstrous felony of laying low our forests; for let us remember that they have cut down several hundred millions worth of our trees.

"Everything went—venerable shade trees of the roadside, the parks, and the fields, elms and poplars; experimental trees, exotic or curious; historical trees; forest trees such as oaks, ash, beech, or of the orchard, such as walnut trees; massive growths of both deciduous and indeciduous varieties; forests belonging to the nation, to communes, to charitable institutions, or to private individuals; nothing was spared, old or young, tall timber or coppice wood, not even the bedding.

"They had set out to leave nothing standing when they were finally compelled to let go under the irresistible pressure of our victorious troops, and in some cases left their cutting unfinished." * * *

The damage done to the various forests is indicated in the following reports the Forestry Society now available:

The operations of the occupying nation had begun—one must break one's word in in all things—by cutting down the resinous trees. As early as July 7, 16, we were informed of the seizure of the resinous forests belonging notably to the communes of Chimay and Forges, Mr. F. Brugmann in the territory of Vaillere and of the Riezes, and to Mr. G. Malengreau in the commune of Jacquenotse.

The exploitation of the spruces on the Revers d'Oise and in Fagne, the two cantons belonging to the city of Chimay, and that of the wild pines, in the commune of Forges, was carried out quickly: the case was the same with wild pines, about sixty years old, planted as tell sentinels at the entrance of the oak groves of the commune of Salles and in regard to which they already dispensed with the formality of sending a notice of seizure. This latter cutting was exploited at the end of September, 1916; it was the same way with some spruces which the communes of Seloignes and Forges-Philippe owned on one of the heights of their forests of Thierarche.

"It took more time to fell the splendid mass of spruces of the Hauts-Marais. This forest was assuredly the most beautiful of this kind that existed in Belgium, great spruces, planted about 1840, and whose spires seemed to reach the sky in the darkness which their thick branches left on the ground. This beautiful mass no longer exists; all the spruces, and with them large quantities of trees which grew in the forest proper, along walks and borders, all have disappeared for the satisfaction of the needs of the occupier, who never cared, of course, to indemnify the owner.

"At the same time there were being exploited in Thierarche, on the territory of Macquenoise, pine woods mixed with birch. The Germans had constructed a Decauville railroad in order to transport the timber to the railroad station at Momignies. On this track was a wheezy locomotive pulling a car which contained at most one and one-half cubic meters of wood; and good people, good Belgians at that, were nevertheless admiring the spirit of organization of the occupiers!

"The quantity of oaks concentrated in the forests of the Chimay region and the situation of the forested areas with respect to the railroad stations adapted to the German enterprises, are likewise the reasons why the Thierarche forests had to suffer worse than those of Fagne.

"In view of the stoppage of business the greater part of the communes had failed to sell the oaks of the cuttings of 1915 and following. On the contrary, all the white wood, which is suited to the manufacture of wooden shoes—the only local industry that kept up during the war—all the white wood had been sold as soon as the exploitation of the coppe had permitted operations of timber selection. This was, in fact, all timber saved from the breakup and turned over to Belgian industry for the consumption of the interior of the country, but it was necessary to be disillusioned soon on this point, also with respect to the honesty of our adversaries.

"The birch oak forests of Bouriers and Forges were attacked first; while the felling of communal forests took place in violation of all rights and conventions. We must recognize that here at least was frenzied desire to injure and ravage the forest, to wipe out the forest, and all resources for the future, the bad desire, we will say, does not appear, only the larger trees fell and enough others were preserved so that the forest still has the appearance of high timber over a thin copse. However, all the big oaks are felled; as a matter of fact, they constitute the b of the value.

"The forest of Monceau-Imbrechies, traversed from south to north by the road from Monceau to Seloignes, reached the facilities of the Seloignes-Monceau railroad station. It was one of the richest forests in the region, well served by two metaled roads, and situated between the railroad station and the locality which comprises many makers of wooden shoes, all being circumstances which gave value to the various classes of timber. Its big oaks, while not all of excellent quality, were known far and wide, and offered dimensions little known elsewhere. One of these veterans measured 13¾ feet at a height of five feet and was 33 feet high; it was named the Big Benefit Oak. Individuals from 6 feet to 8 feet in diameter were common there, those measuring from 8 feet to 11 feet were not rare, and there were several gauging 11 feet and over. Groups of beeches, modern and ancient, were met with, and distinguished themselves by an exceedingly rapid growth. Tall birches and big sycamore maples completed this fine high-timber forest.

"To this forest was given the names of Tailles Andre, Benefice, Richots, Mauvais Pas, and Atelier; the cuttings dated from 1906 to 1917. Apart from the high timber, everything has disappeared: Secular oaks, groups of imposing beeches, tall birches, big maples, rooted saplings, staddles, moderns, ancients, superanciehts, young cadets, tall timber of young cuttings, reserves of middle-age stature, and old exploitations—everything was chopped down to within twenty inches of the ground and dragged through copses of all ages to the roads by the pitiless cable actuated by a tractor. The copse is broken up, crushed, distorted, and destroyed.

"The forest of Imprechles, a section of the same commune, was cut to the ground, or almost; it was stocked with about the same growth as that of Monceau, though a little less rich in big trees.

"The commune of Beauwelz owned high timber on copse, less thickly planted than the Monceau forests. Of all the oaks, beeches, birches, and maples nothing is left over almost the whole area.

"Such is the work of the Germans, of professionals, for it appears that it was professional foresters who were charged with designing and directing these henceforth famous exploitations."—American Forestry.

TRANSPORTING GASOLINE.

LOSS and damages to life and property due to the transportation of gasoline during 1918 was many times as great as from the transportation of the large volume of explosives required to meet war conditions.

A circular issued by the Bureau for Safe Transportation shows that in the eight-year period from 1910 to 1917, inclusive, seventy-eight people were killed, 607 were injured, and a property loss of $1,626,000 resulted from the transportation of gasoline on railroads, while during the same period only three people were killed, thirty injured, and property loss of $147,000 resulted from the transportation of explosives on the railroads.

In 1918, under war conditions, sixteen deaths, forty-six injuries, and a property loss of $881,000 resulted from the transportation of gasoline on railroads, while for the same year there was one death, four injuries, and property loss of $33,000 resulting from the transportation of explosives alone.

The circular says the average tank car has defects which cause leakage and tells how shippers can remedy the defects.

TOURS

AT LAST You May Visit France and the Great Battlefields

The FIRST opportunity for tourists to see Europe since 1914—the very first opportunity to visit France and the Great Battlefields—is now offered by Raymond-Whitcomb. After five years the gates are opened, the bars are down, the welcome is extended this Fall. Now Raymond-Whitcomb may resume, with confidence, our forty years of service in taking discriminating Americans to Europe; taking them in comfort; in safety and with full security against trouble, annoyance or complications—despite existing conditions.

The LAST opportunity to see Europe as one great Battlefield, practically unchanged, is offered by our 1919 Fall Tours, which will include Chateau Thierry, Verdun, the Argonne, St. Mihiel and the Hindenburg line—the historic ruins of Rheims and Ypres and immortal Paris herself. Under our carefully planned arrangements you will have nothing on your mind—despite war zone conditions—except to get in comfort exactly what you go for, whether that be to visit France and the Battlefields before their character is changed, or to see where friends or members of your family fought, or just to gratify the longing for Europe—or, all three combined.

People might hesitate to venture alone, or with lack of experience, into what is all-but the War Zone, into lands just emerging from disorder; but members of Raymond-Whitcomb Tours will travel with serene confidence, in the absolute knowledge that we would never announce a series of tours that we did not positively know would maintain our reputation, built up by forty years of successful experience.

Tours from five weeks to three months, including Belgium, Southern France and Italy, now open for bookings. For dates and full details, write at once (to assure membership) to

PROHIBITION IN CANADA

Hair Tonic One Buffer Against the Rude Course of Legislative Morality in the Dominion

By W. J. WHITESIDE.

THE attempt of some North Americans to eliminate alcoholic stimulants from the habits and customs of all North Americans is proving once more the old truth that abstract ethics and concrete desires are not, by any method of interpretation, amiable bedfellows. A few rugged ones can withstand the rude shock of the full course; the many not so strong or who lack the whip of self-subjugation must be brought to it gradually.

The United States is entering upon the "forbidden" era; in Canada the verboten order has been familiar to all citizens from garrisoned Halifax to placid Victoria for a considerable time. There is only the effects of a slight difference in environment, broadly speaking, separating the general character of United Statesicans and Canadians. Therefore the attitude of various Canadians, and what may reasonably be described as "ministerial sentiment and opinion," such of it as has come to the surface, are surely of interest to Americans for study and analysis.

Let it be understood at the outset that no argument is to be laid down here upon the physical and moral principles involved. The purpose is merely to define the relation between the former drinker, the drink itself, and the desire to procure it.

I feel that if the thoughts of most Canadians, deprived of their liquid "satisfaction" by process of law, on this subject could be crystallized, they would be something like this:

1. Prohibitionists like to think of themselves as revolutionists; but a revolutionist is a man who very ardently desires to obtain something, and is willing to sacrifice a great deal he values highly in the process of getting it. A prohibitionist does very ardently, desire to not obtain something and he is willing to talk, and work, and vote that all his fellow-citizens shall not obtain it either. Therefore he, the prohibitionist, is not a revolutionist.

2. A true revolutionist is a man who ardently desires certain conditions to prevail; he is willing to risk in the future that posterity may have the advantage of those conditions. He makes a sacrifice or runs the chance of having to. Not so the prohibitionist. He, like the revolutionist, desires a certain condition to obtain, and wishes posterity to benefit, but he expects other men to make the sacrifice while he, and those who come after, reap the benefits from the others' deprivation.

3. People the world over have grown a habit which has been recognized and legalized. Business competition was modifying that habit and local option was acting as a "dryer," of no mean worth. The great war threw stabilized ideas into the melting pot of change. It was right for Canadians to deprive themselves of drinking alcoholic concoctions if it would help the bullets and shells and bayonets of the men in the front trenches—who were getting liquor—to do so. It was unfair for a few Canadians to expect that spirit of willingness to sacrifice to be extended beyond the limits of the end of the war, or to attempt, then to fasten such renunciation upon all Canadians.

4. Reformation is not brought about through the application of external force, but by the growth of knowledge within the individual. Desire in one individual is not removed simply because another individual causes the removal of the means of satisfaction. Prohibition in these circumstances is simply the attempt of one set of persons within a nation to impose their opinions as to conduct upon another set of persons. Imposition is never regarded with complacency by strong-minded men, and so the cleavage between the two classes—those with wants, and those without—becomes wider rather than narrower.

In Canada, the only Provincial Government to put a prohibiting law upon the statute books without consulting the votes of the people affected was Ontario. Referendum was the method followed in the other Canadian provinces. Ontario acceded to the request of the forces arrayed against the traffic in spirits, and passed a measure as a direct result of a rather generally signed petition. Among Ontarians there was no great outcry at first, because of the nature of the arguments used. The people were at war. Those chiefly desiring the passing of the act pointed out how Russia and Britain and France and other nations had curtailed the traffic in order that the whole spending power of the nation might be enlisted against the enemy in Europe. The people of the province, which sent more men to the front line than had any other, were peculiarly susceptible to this sort of appeal, and—to cut short a lengthy subject—the provincial act was passed.

It did not guarantee anything like absolute prohibition. The sale of liquor in Canada, except in specified shops to doctors' prescriptions under close supervision, was possible, and, what was more significant, the act could not prevent importation from Quebec where drinkables had not at that time been legislated against. So the liquor sellers changed their addresses to Montreal, to Niagara Falls, New York, and possibly other points as well, literature was mailed to Ontario purchasers and soon the railways and express companies were carrying large quantities to thirsty consumers in Ontario.

Again the prohibitionists carried the fight forward and began to clamor that the "will of the people" was being thwarted and could only be protected by Federal action preventing the importation of liquor into areas where its sale was contrary to law. An Order in Council was duly passed at Ottawa to furnish the required "protection," and drinkers and their drinks separated in Ontario by process of law.

Mind operates according to its own laws. If a desire for something has been agreed to by the mental machinery of an individual, any attempt to remove the object desired without consent, if success is to be looked for, must proceed along one of these lines:

1. Something must be substituted.
2. If that is not possible, a motive, such as the good of others, or of the national interest is to be set against the desire.
3. The individual must be given facts he can accept to give him sufficient engine power to overcome the desire and emancipate himself from drink and prohibitionists forever.

In Ontario the first alternative was not heeded. A few newspapers took the matter up, but the prohibitionists did not, and nothing was attempted. The second, as may be assumed, sufficed for reason of sacrifice on the part of the great majority. The third has not been generally bothered about unless we can accept occasional editorial, prohibition, and some business men's utterances, agreeing how very much better the drinker (he hasn't been asked about agreeing) and all the people of the province are without drink than with it. So the only one of the three alternatives that should not have been allowed to stand by itself was permitted to act as motive power to make prohibition possible and maintain it in force in Ontario.

Only a few had sufficient funds to stock their cellars against a protracted period of drought. The great majority of those who took a lot or a little habitually could put down a supply sufficient for a short time only. It seemed a lot when it went into the cellar, but isn't it surprising how quickly householders who had a good supply become known? The natural idea of North Americans being hospitality, and as every one likes to be a "good fellow," stocks dwindled with rapidity and the state of drought became fairly general. The doctors then came in for attention, and some have admitted from time to time to having issued a rather large number of prescriptions to be filled by sick and ailing from Government vendors.

The fine against being caught trafficking in liquor, and even being found with it in the streets, (in pocket,) was heavy, $200 plus, but the police continued to prosecute offenders from day to day, and the coffers of the Crown were enriched accordingly, to the consequent shrinkage of the pockets of irate citizens. Eagle-eyed agents of the Crown detected the choice spirits in all sorts of containers, but doubtless a great deal was never discovered. Then the epidemic of Spanish influenza broke out in the early Fall. Many doctors declared that ardent spirits were essential to combating the full effects of this plague. It appealed to many who had not been stricken as a splendid preventive—a quart of prevention being much better than bothering overworked gravediggers finding a place in the cemetery—and so long queues of handbags, held by patient men, passed day after day before the counters of the liquor vendors, all intent upon "protecting their families at any cost." The stiff rules, it is admitted, were lessened considerably by the provincial authorities while the plague was in progress. But even the "flu" passed.

Toronto is a Tory stronghold. The boast of the greater number of its voters for years has been that a Liberal (Grit is the common name) could not be elected if he were the Archangel Gabriel himself. An able lawer—a Grit, Hartley H. Dewart—son of a Methodist parson, and a man-about-town—contested one of the Toronto seats in the Ontario Legislature against a straight Government candidate. The issue hinged upon the liquor policy. He won! Other by-elections were held, and nearly always the result has not been satisfactory to the Government. Now, to get the proper perspective, it is necessary to go back a few years. In Ontario Sir James Whitney, leading the Tories, had decisively defeated the Liberals, led by N. W. Rowell, who was advocating the abolition of the bar. Sir James and his party pledged to proceed on temperance lines, just as he felt public opinion justified action.

As the war progressed and the Federal Premier Sir Robert Borden set about forming a Union Government he called Mr. Rowell into his Cabinet at Ottawa. He was succeeded by Mr. Proudfoot, an eminent and admittedly able lawyer, as opposition chief, and the successful Grit in the Toronto by-election became one of his chief lieutenants As unrest grew against the Ontario Temperance act, or rather the way it was being enforced, Dewart launched charges against the Government, touching the administration of the act, and a commission was appointed to hear the evidence. Nothing remarkable was adduced, but the opportunity for the public to talk had been provided. This must have affected the rank and file of the Liberal members, for, when recently their convention was held to choose a permanent leader, Mr. Proudfoot was defeated and Dewart selected to lead the destinies of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition in Ontario.

Another aspect of the Ontario political situation should be touched upon. Death called Sir James Whitney before the term of the Legislature had elapsed. Sir William Hearst was selected as Prime Minister by the Tories. Hearst introduced the Ontario Temperance act and is still credited with standing loyally by it. So the Tory (Conservative) Party of Sir James Whitney, elected because it held the confidence of the people, elected as a foil to the abolish-the-bar policy of the Hon. Wesley Rowell of the Liberals, because of its advocacy of prohibition, as it is known in Ontario, must now be regarded as the Prohibition Party. H. H. Dewart, elected because he was not a prohibition advocate, is at the head of the Liberal Party, formerly the great movers for abolishing the bar. Liquor is some mixer! And, to cap the climax, there is to be a referendum on the liquor question in Ontario in the Autumn, and there are rumblings, possibly presaging an election on or about the same time, proceeding among Tory party adherents in Ontario.

The Methodist Church, of which the former Ontario Liberal leader, the Hon. N. W. Rowell, was a distinguished adherent, and to which the present Premier of Ontario, Sir William Hearst, gave his allegiance, remains the head and front of the prohibition movement. With the papers featuring news of the return of soldiers and other old countrymen from Ontario to Britain because of "better conditions now in the Old Country," and "a man's liberties are not interfered with as much there as here"; with unrest and strikes and discontent filling the air, the Methodist Church presents an unshaken front to all comers and demands unfaltering allegiance to the prohibition cause. Some elder folk are, accordingly, very much concerned because they feel, if "these people are successful with liquor the pipe will soon be made to go as well."

THOUSANDS OF JOBLESS SOLDIERS

UNABLE to finance themselves during any lengthy period of unemployment, too proud to ask assistance from welfare organizations, too honest to resort to illegitimate methods, many former soldiers, sailors, and marines who have been unable to get jobs today are in despair," declared Alfred L. Smith, Executive Secretary of the Re-employment Committee of New York City, in issuing an appeal to employers asking them to make sacrifices, if necessary, to give work to ex-fighters.

"During the last week we have had numerous former service men applying at the Re-employment Bureau, 505 Pearl Street, for positions who admitted they were without money with which to buy food. Other applicants said they did not have the necessary carfare with which to go after jobs open in various parts of the city. The Re-employment Committee will not, of course, allow any boy to lose the chance of getting a job because of the lack of carfare or to go without luncheon, but I am mentioning this situation as a reason why employers should strain a point to give former service men jobs. These boys are Americans; they are New Yorkers; they have won honors abroad.

"It is true that these ex-fighters were paid in full when they received their discharge. They also got a bonus of $60 each. Out of this money the majority of them had to buy new clothes. What they had left was spent during the time they have been out of the service. Some of them may have been too liberal with what little money they had on hand after leaving the service. But that does not alter the fact that we must provide employment for each and every man who was with the colors when this nation faced the greatest crisis in its history.

"It is no reflection upon the employers of New York or upon the Re-employment Bureau to admit that there are thousands of jobless ex-service men in this city. The trouble is that while there are hundreds of vacant positions, most of the jobless men are either young and inexperienced and who are without special training, or executives, professional, and technical men, who find it difficult to connect during what is generally admitted as the dullest season of the year. The great demand today is for skilled mechanics and ordinary unskilled labor. For these positions most of the idle soldiers applying at the Re-employment Bureau are entirely unfitted and would not satisfy the employer in case they were hired for such jobs. We cannot refer a general clerk to a skilled toolmaker's job, nor a civil engineer to a heavy porter's job.

"While the Re-employment Committee is confident there will be jobs for everybody within a comparatively short time, it is imperative that work be found immediately for hundreds of ex-service men who cannot finance themselves much longer.

"Scores of men who got married before they went overseas are desperately seeking work. One man who called at the bureau the other day was willing to take a job at $16 a week, so as to be able to buy food for his mother, his wife, and for another that had not yet arrived. We have scores of men who are practically the sole support of their parents.

"Of course the various welfare organizations that are paying the expenses of the Re-employment Bureau would be only too glad to help any service man who needs financial assistance. But these boys will not go to such agencies. They are frank when talking with the personnel of the Re-employment Bureau, the employes of which were practically all in the service, but when advised to apply for relief at a philanthropic organization they refuse to do so.

"'All I want is a job,' is the universal cry of the ex-fighter who is up against it today.

"These men are not trying to capitalize the fact that they were in the service. The majority of them take off their uniforms within a few days after getting out of the service. They apply at the Re-employment Bureau because they know we are placing hundreds of men every week in positions.

"We are getting wonderful co-operation from the employers with whom we are in constant touch. There are some employers, however, who do not realize the real situation. If these will consider what the man who is just out of the service is up against and will make a place for at least one ex-fighter it will be appreciated."

NEW YORK TIMES WAR VOLUMES

20 VOLUMES IN THE SET

A monumental work starting from the beginning of the war and ending with the Peace Treaty

The New York Times War Volumes present the history of the war in a new form. This history was written as the war progressed, and the chief episodes are told by eyewitnesses. The important documents, records, reports, &c., were compiled at the very outset and cover the mighty conflict month by month.

The history combines the narration of facts with the literature of the period, all closely interwoven with the official documents, utterances, and reports.

The Volumes combine the characteristics of an Encyclopedia, Narrative History, Literary History, and Documentary History.

Nineteen of the Volumes are now ready for delivery, bringing the history up to April, 1919. Volume 20, which will speedily follow, will contain the full text of the German Peace Treaty, word for word, and also a cumulative index, together with a handy gazetteer of names and places mentioned in the preceding nineteen.

Each volume has also a separate index with cross references.

A narrative summary, written by a competent historian, covering a three months' period of the war introduces each volume. Volume 1 has an introduction written by Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard, Volume 2 by Dr. Paul van Dyke of Princeton, Volume 3 by Dr. Seymour of Yale, Volume 4 by Dr. Lingelbach of the University of Pennsylvania.

Each volume is illustrated with rotogravure portraits and pictures of historic episodes, 48 pages of illustrations in each volume.

International cartoons form a feature of each volume. There are 60 pages representing the best cartoons which were produced in the various countries during the different periods of the war.

Altogether in the 20-volume set there are 12,000 pages, 960 pages of illustrations in rotogravure, and 1,200 pages of cartoons.

A distinguishing characteristic of the work is its impartiality. There is no comment, no bias. The documents of enemy countries are published with as much freedom as those of our allies, wherever procurable.

There are three bindings—leather, ¾ leather, cloth. They are sold for cash with discount, or on the installment plan by easy monthly payments.

VICE AND POLITICS AS FACTORS IN CHICAGO RIOTS

Negroes and Whites Drank and Danced Together in All Night Cabarets of the Black Belt—How the Pro-German Thompson Got Nomination as Mayor

By E. FRANK GARDINER.

EXPLOITATION of the negro in Chicago by politicians is regarded by many as the chief underlying cause of the race riots in that city. The bestowal of political preferment, and the license under which "everything went" in the Black Belt of the second largest American city was the inflammable part of the tinder which finally set the city ablaze.

The influx of thousands of negroes from the South in the last three years was a contributing factor. Their arrival in an already congested district made expansion necessary. Steadily the Black Belt, which stretches for five miles through the heart of the densely populated South Side of Chicago, bulged out into what a few years ago was a choice residential district. This continuous encroachment aroused protests and bitter feeling.

The advance guard of the colored race which moved into white neighborhoods was the better class of negro families, who sought to escape the steady encroachment of the undesirable element of their own race. They had no desire to antagonize their white neighbors. Their relations had always been friendly. But they were between two fires. Pressing always behind them was the influx of a lawless element of their own race. Few of the newcomers brought negro women with them, and some Chicago observers hold the absence of home life among them partly accountable for the present trouble.

Political Power.

The Second Ward in Chicago is the heart of the Black Belt. Eighty per cent. of the voters in this ward are black. White men represented this ward in the City Council until 1915, but now both Aldermen are negroes.

Two men control most of the negro vote in Chicago. They are Congressman Martin B. Madden of the First Illinois District and George F. Harding, former Alderman, later State Senator, and now City Controller.

It was the balance of power held by the negroes and swung by Harding that gave William Hale Thompson, more widely known as a pro-German than for his kindnesses to negroes, the nomination for Mayor of Chicago in the Spring of 1915. Harding had represented the Second Ward in Chicago for several years. He retired and permitted Oscar De Priest, a negro, to be elected. In return for this favor the negroes swept the Mayoralty nomination into Thompson's lap. Thompson won the nomination by a margin of a few hundred votes.

De Priest became one of the chief floor leaders in the City Council for the Thompson administration. His public career was cut short by his indictment in connection with the alleged collection of tribute in the Black Belt, but he was later acquitted. Another negro succeeded him. Then the Second Ward negroes grew bolder, demanded both seats in the City Council, and got them.

In his campaign for the nomination and election in 1915 Thompson catered to the negro voters. After his election he rewarded many of their leaders with jobs.

So openly did the Thompson crowd treat with the negroes that somebody dubbed the City Hall "Uncle Tom's Cabin." One man caused handbills to be printed, setting forth a complete cast of characters, which included Mayor Thompson and other City Hall jobholders, white and black. It got a big laugh, which is Chicago's usual good-natured way of disposing of her problems.

Lid Off the Black Belt.

Thompson had been Mayor only a short time when evidence was apparent that there was no lid so far as the Black Belt was concerned. From other sections of the city white men and women of the old underworld, who had experienced some long, lean years, flocked to the neighborhood. White men bought saloons and cabarets, and pushed negroes to the front as their ostensible owners. Soon the Black Belt became known as the district where everything "went."

All-night cabarets were jammed with whites and blacks until the morning sun streaked the sky over Lake Michigan. In other parts of the city saloons and cabarets closed at 1 A. M., but automobiles lined the curbs for blocks all night in the Black Belt, and late comers stood in line for hours outside some of the more notorious "black and tan" cabarets waiting for a chance to get inside. Jazz bands filled the air with syncopated sound, while in the cabarets whites and blacks intermingled in carousal. It was here that the "shimmy" dance is said to have originated.

The rattle of dice and the click of poker chips were seldom stilled in the heart of this district. Gambling was conducted on a business basis. A "syndicate" was formed, and no independent could operate successfully in that district without its approval. These gambling games were run under the name of clubs, but a fat bankroll gained easy admission to them.

"Bill" Lewis, noted for years as a gambler, conducted a game in Thirty-fifth Street near State Street. So brazen was the conduct of this gambling house that for a long time Lewis did not bother to pull the curtains down, and the games could be watched from the platform of the elevated railroad station near by. Finally, out of seeming consideration for the feelings of the police, the shades were drawn.

Conditions Generally Known.

The newspapers of Chicago repeatedly exposed conditions in the Black Belt. Members of the City Council sometimes denounced it. Reformers visited the all-night cabarets and wrote long reports about them. Numerous complaints were made to the police. Conditions finally became so notorious that the all-night cabarets were closed. For a few weeks the Black Belt was comparatively quiet, except for the gambling games, which were seldom molested.

Then came vice in a new form; in the shape of clubs, which were in reality dance halls. These new places had no liquor licenses, although most of them sold intoxicants, and they didn't open their doors until midnight or 1 A. M. They caught the crowds which surged out of the cabarets at the closing hour and held them until sunrise.

The old Pekin Theatre at 2,700 State Street, for years one of the leading negro amusement houses in the country, became one of these dance halls. They were openly conducted for a long time without being molested, but early in 1918 the City Council passed an anti-cabaret ordiance which put a damper for a time on the night life of the city.

Last Spring, however, the Mayoralty election came around again. Mayor Thompson was a candidate for re-election and was re-elected. The Black Belt did its duty.

When the primary campaign opened the lid was tossed overboard. Resorts which had been closed reopened. The Black Belt became again the centre of night activities.

With the elections over in April and prohibition looming up in the near future, the hearts of the city authorities were softened, and the lid stayed off.

Frank O. Lowden, Governor of Illinois.

William Hale Thompson, Mayor of Chicago.

In the last few months conditions in the Black Belt have been almost unprecedented. Men who have traveled the country over say that nowhere in the United States have they witnessed such scenes as they saw in the notorious "black-and-tan" resorts on the South Side in Chicago.

State Attorney Maclay Hoyne of Chicago a few days ago laid the blame for the race riots at the door of the politicians, who, he said, taught the negroes disrespect for the law.

"The Police Department," said Mr. Hoyne, "has been demoralized to such extent by the politicians, black and white, on the South Side that they are afraid to arrest and prosecute men with political backing or who claim to have political influence."

Others have issued similar warnings from time to time in the last two or three years.

Municipal Judge Harry M. Fisher, after sitting for a time in the Morals Court, where the larger per cent. of the offenders were negro men and women, said:

"My opinion, based on observation in this court, is that crime conditions among colored people are being deliberately fostered by the present City Administration. Disorderly cabarets, thieves, and depraved women are allowed in the section of the city where colored people live. They have an expression, 'the law is around tonight,' as a warning to behave, so seldom is the law enforced."

Chicago's Lesson.

When Chicago began to come out of the nightmare of rioting last Friday, it is propable that the smiles which greeted that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" parody had worn off, never to return. The city's roster of dead was 32, of whom 14 were white. The total of injured was given in press dispatches as 300, with the probability that perhaps 200 others had been injured without making any report to the police and hospital authorities. Governor Lowden had sent 6,000 troops to guard the city and quell the mobs, under the direction of Adjt. Gen. Dickson, and apparently quiet had been restored.

For five days the district affected by the rioting had been without fresh meats or vegetables. City Controller Harding, who owes his political preferment in large measure to his influence in the Black Belt, sent 2,000 bottles of milk into that area, and the movement of supplies in that direction was initiated at the same time. Negro undertakers began to prepare for the burial of the dead. During the disturbance there had been no funerals in the Black Belt.

Presumably Chicago has learned a lesson such as she never drew from the numerous surveys of negro conditions in that city, or from warnings. Whether other American cities will take the lesson to heart remains to be seen.

Chicago's negro population is difficult to estimate. The estimates run from 50,000 to 175,000. There is no authentic information of recent date on the subject. The United States census taken in 1910 reports a population of 44,103 negroes in Chicago. In the last three years, however, the increase has been enormous. The colored population has grown more rapidly in proportion to its numbers than any other part of the city's population.

Junius B. Wood of The Chicago Daily News, who made an extensive survey of the negro problem in Chicago, estimated the colored population in 1916 at 75,000. The steady influx of thousands of negroes from the South and the continuous spread of the colored section of the city indicates that the population is more than 100,000 at present. It is a difficult population to count. Probably more than 50 per cent. are lodgers.

Chicago's Black Belt is an average of half a mile wide, although it flares to one and two miles in width at certain points. From Twenty-second Street it runs south beyond Sixty-third Street. South State Street is the backbone. The South Side elevated railroad runs through the heart of the district its entire length. The South State Street surface car line is patronized almost exclusively by negroes. Most of the other surface car lines connecting the "Loop," Chicago's business district, with the South Side, run through part of the negro district.

The eastern edge of the Black Belt is a handsome residential district, on which the negroes have encroached steadily for years. Its western boundary is a railroad and industrial district. There are other colored sections in the city, two on the South Side and one on the West Side, but they are restricted in area.

Advantages of Negroes.

For years negroes lived in Chicago without friction and without disturbances of any kind. Leaders of the race held positions of trust. Thousands of them bought homes. Many of them achieved success as lawyers, physicians, and in business. Their children went to the public schools with white children. There was no segregation. Some negroes held public office, both elective and appointive. Twelve negroes have served in the Illinois State Legislature.

It has been said that churches probably wield more power among negroes than with any other single class in the United States. The colored people in Chicago have sixty churches, which had a membership in 1916 of 31,870. Their membership is probably much larger now. They are financially prosperous and most of the larger ones maintain employment agencies. Many of them conduct day nurseries where children are cared for while their mothers work.

Chicago has two institutions conducted by colored people for members of their own race, which are models of their kind. One is the Provident Hospital, at 16 West Thirty-sixth Street, which has figured prominently in the day's news concerning the rioting. The other is the Wabash Avenue department of the Young Men's Christian Association, at 3,763 South Wabash Avenue, conducted exclusively for colored men.

The Provident Hospital is the leading institution of its kind in the United States. With the Nathan M. Freer $30,000 Home for Nurses, the plant represents an investment of $125,000, and is free of debt. Its affairs are conducted exclusively by negroes, and about one-third of the sufferers cared for there are charity patients. Money for the establishment of this institution was given by Philip D. Armour, Marshall Field, and George M. Pullman, deceased, and H. H. Kohlsaat, a retired newspaper publisher.

Negro Institutions.

The Y. M. C. A. establishment cost $185,000. It has more than 1,500 members, and 150 young men live in its dormitories. The negroes have their own stores and theatres, and there is a bank conducted by a negro and patronized almost exclusively by members of his race. Many newspapers are published by and for negroes in Chicago. Some are local, but others have national circulation. The Defender, published by R. S. Abbott, has the largest circulation of its kind in the United States.

In Chicago, as elsewhere, negro families of the better class have always been ambitious to get into better homes and better surroundings. This has been one of the chief causes of complaint. The entrance of colored residents into high-class white neighborhoods has always been met with protests, and sometimes with threats. Sometimes real estate operators were back of these invasions. They hoped to profit by affecting real estate values.

A study of the negro housing problem in Chicago made by the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy revealed that colored tenants paid disproportionately higher rent for their apartments, which, as a rule, were in poorer repair than those of their immigrant neighbors.

"PROSPERITY" AND THE FIFTY-CENT DOLLAR

George E. Roberts Says Bloated Credit System Has Brought Deceptive Appearance of Financial Well-Being—Calls It Chief Cause of High Cost of Living

HAVE you paused to reflect that the dollars you are spending nowadays are fifty-cent dollars?

Of course you know that your dollars only buy about 50 cents' worth of shoes or T-bone steak, but probably you have thought vaguely that prices had gone up, and let it go at that. There has been so much talk about the increased cost of living and so little about the decreased value of money that the facts have been obscured. The fact is that the dollar has been so diluted as to do only half as much as it did, say, before the war. It is as though you had diluted an acid with as great a volume of water. It takes twice as much to do the work.

If the United States had issued greenbacks instead of bonds to finance the war there would be a clearer understanding of the inflation which has cut in half the purchasing power of the dollar. It would be apparent that the production of useful commodities having been curtailed, and the turnout of dollars having been greatly expanded, it would take more dollars to buy a given commodity, under the law of supply and demand. But the step from greenbacks to bonds was a step out of the realm of currency into the realm of credit, and it confused the issue.

Factor in High Prices.

The man who had a savings account of a thousand dollars before the war has only half as much now. The man who works for $30 a week, say, is actually getting only $25. Those things are true, whether you blame high prices or inflation. But if you are prone to consider high prices a kind of inescapable juggernaut, you are wrong, because, according to George E. Roberts, former Director of the Mint, and now Vice President of the National City Bank, high prices are chiefly a reflex of the credit inflation from which this country is suffering, and the inflation is remediable.

"Twenty years ago the people of this country rallied against the fifty-cent dollar," Mr. Roberts said the other day, "and Free Silver was voted down. But we have got the fifty-cent dollar today, and it is a question whether we are going to make it permanent.

"Everybody knows that the purchasing power of money has declined, that prices are twice as high, but most people think it is due to the fact that something has happened to commodities. Few think of it as due to changes on the side of money. There is something delusive about a rise in prices due to depreciation in currency. It sets up a situation which looks like prosperity, and which for a time has some of the features of real prosperity. Rising prices stimulate buying and stimulate production while they last. They make business good and bring profitable employment. We have had a great increase in bank deposits, and some people, including some bankers, regard that as prosperity. They think it is proof of an accumulation of wealth.

"But bank deposits are not wealth. If you borrow $10,000 from your banker, and it is credited to your checking account, the deposits of that bank rise $10,000. And when you check it out, your checks will be deposited in other banks, and will increase their deposits. Bank deposits constitute purchasing power, and the $10,000 we have taken as an example remains in circulation until somebody pays off the $10,000 out of savings.

Bank Deposits Not Wealth.

"So long as that $10,000 remains in circulation it is not an increase in wealth. But that is the kind of purchasing power we have in this country. It is pure inflation, a kind of bloat or dropsy.

"If the present level of prices is permanent the value of money and of all obligations to pay fixed sums of money will be depreciated approximately one-half. It means that all the savings of the people which are in the form of bank deposits, promissory notes, or life insurance are in large part, possibly one-half, wiped out as with a sponge. The farmer or business man who, in the declining years of life, has converted his property into bonds or mortgages will find the interest as he receives it, and the principal when it is paid, of only about one-half the purchasing power that he bargained for. A great many salaried people and wage earners are unable to get a prompt adjustment of their pay. The railroads and public utilities have been reduced to a state of almost financial ruin. Nobody gains anything by the higher scale except at the expense of some one else. The distribution of higher pay is not based upon any principles of equity, but upon the power of coercion.

"The inflated state of bank credit is a factor in these high prices. The whole situation is artificial. Bank deposits are all up 50 to 100 per cent., and a large part of the increase is pure inflation, due to the increase of loans. The way people are befuddled into thinking this state of things is prosperity has been the despair of economists in all times. These deposits have the same effect as so much paper money.

"Liberty bond loans in the banks ought to be paid off, and the loans of the Federal Reserve Banks ought to be liquidated. The Federal Reserve Banks were never intended to be a resort for continuous borrowing. They were intended, as the name implies, to be banks holding reserves of credit for emergency and reasonable requirements.

Farmer's Situation.

"It will be interesting to see how the farmer comes out of this situation. He is getting high prices for his products now, owing to conditions which are evidently abnormal and temporary. In normal times Eastern Europe, including Russia, exports breadstuffs in large quantities to Central and Western Europe. At present grains and meats are being shipped from the United States not only to supply an unusual deficiency in Western Europe, but to supply a deficiency in Eastern Europe as well. When Europe will get back to normal food production I do not know; not this year and probably not next year, but I think quite rapidly after order is restored. I don't take much stock in the theory that European agriculture will be prostrate a long time, or that Europe is swept bare of live stock. Great Britain has as much live stock as before the war. France had only 12,000,000 head of cattle before the war, and the reduction is not great. Germany had about 20,000,000 cattle and Austria-Hungary about 15,000,000 before the war; there has been some reduction, but I doubt if the reduction in the herds of Europe exceeds the increase that has taken place in the United States, South America, and Australia.

"The high prices will stimulate agricultural production, not only in Europe, but all over the world. England, as a matter of settled national policy, is going to grow more food in the future. The British colonies are expecting a large immigration and making preparations to settle people on the land. Our own Secretary of the Interior, Secretary Lane, is asking Congress for an appropriation of $100,000,000 to settle soldiers on public lands, and many of the States which have unoccupied lands are taking steps to aid soldiers in making farm homes. Then we must look for some results from the work of the Agricultural Departments, national and State; the agricultural colleges, and county agents, and all the other efforts that are being made to develop a more scientific agriculture.

Lower Farm Prices.

"In short, we must recognize that agriculture is being subsidized, and I think it is for the common good that a more scientific agriculture shall be developed. But I think the total result of all this will be to bring a decline in prices of farm products from the war level.

"When this occurs, what is going to be the position of the farmer in relation to the other industries? The report of the International Harvester Company, published last month, shows that its wage scale is 100 per cent. above what it was before the war. The farmer is paying these wages to have his implements made, and he is paying similar wages to have his clothing and his shoes made, his goods transported, and to everybody who does any work, directly or indirectly, for him. If now his products fall, will these other goods and services fall, or will he be expected to feed everybody else at pre-war prices while he goes on paying wages and prices that are artificially stabilized?

"I believe that the banker can render no better service to the farmer than by advising him to use the proceeds of these high prices to pay off his debts. It is a singular fact that people commonly go into debt in good times and pay their debts under pressure in bad times.

"It seems to be the accepted thing nowadays that every class or group of workers shall fix its own conditions of labor and compensation, but the farmer is bound to be at a great disadvantage under any such arrangement. He has never been able to fix the prices of his products, and there is no likelihood that he can do it in the future. He must take the natural price, made by supply and demand, and there is no hardship in that if everybody else is paid on the same basis. The farmer is not interested in supporting artificial methods of price fixing. He will be the goat of the whole system.

"Moreover, let no one think that wages and prices can be long sustained in the other industries when farm products decline. One-third of the population of this country lives on the farms or in communities directly dependent on the farms. When the purchasing power of this one-third declines the rest will feel it. There is a necessary reciprocity in the modern industrial system. If the farmer's income falls to what it was before the war, but he is asked to pay double the pre-war prices for what he buys, he will only buy one-half as much, and the effect will be felt throughout industry. General prosperity cannot be had on any such artificial basis.

"To those of us who have seen much of the settlement of our Western country, there is no mystery about the rising costs of living of the last twenty years. From the beginnings of settlement in this country our people have been exploiting the natural resources, a wealth of soil and timber and minerals that had been in preparation for thousands of years. They had little value to the first settlers, but transportation facilities opened them up to the world. In an incredibly short space of time population coming from all quarters spread over and occupied the country. There has never been a parallel to the settlement of this country and there never will be, for there is no other country like this to be settled. When my father came to Iowa there were about 17,000,000 people in the United States, and my children, if they live the normal term, will see 200,000,000. And the population of the whole world has been increasing. At the close of the wars with Napoleon the population of Europe was about 175,000,000, and at the outbreak of the great war it was 440,000,000.

"All of these people must be fed and clothed and housed, and the cost of food, clothing and shelter depends upon the land and supply of raw materials.

Land and Prices.

"Until a few years ago there was always an abundance of cheap land further west to which the population continually overflowed. These lands played the part of a spillway or safety valve to relieve congestion in the cities and supplied a new field for the discontented. The statesmen of Europe said long ago that the real test of American institutions would come when our cheap lands were gone. Eighty years ago Lord Macaulay, in a discussion over popular government, said, 'As to America, I appeal to the twentieth century!'

"The free lands are gone, the cheap lands are gone. There is still the possibility of largely increasing the production of foodstuffs, but it must be done from lands that require a considerable expenditure of capital, for clearing or for drainage or irrigation, and by more scientific culture.

"People wonder why it is that with all the improvements made in industry the results in living conditions are not more apparent. They read of all the labor-saving machinery in use on the farms—and yet farm products go up! They read of the improvements in cloth-making machinery—they are wonderful; you can go into a weaving mill and see one man tending acres of looms, but if the mill did its work for nothing with raw cotton at the prices of recent years, clothes would have to cost more. And so they read of improvements upon the steam engine and the locomotive, of the applications of electric power, and of new inventions and facilities in all the industries, and they ask what becomes of the benefits. Where is the leak? What is the matter?

Capital and Production.

"The advocates of Socialism say that there is a lack of distribution; but the answer to that is that all new accumulations of capital, whoever owns them, are employed in improving and enlarging the facilities of production, and yield results for the common welfare. The earnings and profits of the past have provided the industrial equipment of today and without that equipment living conditions would be worse than they are. Suppose that with our present population we had to cultivate the fields of Iowa with the implements of fifty years ago, and transport the products to the Eastern markets upon the railways of fifty years ago, with the locomotives of fifty years ago, and the little ten-ton cars of fifty years ago.

"The census figures show that capital is a constantly increasing factor in production. In 1899 the capital invested in manufacturing in the United States amounted to $1,770 for each person employed in the same industries, in 1904 it was $2,117 to each person employed, in 1909 it was $2,488, and in 1914 it was $2,848, all of which means that we are working with more effective agencies. Even the farmer now must have an important investment in equipment, and the real hope for social progress in the future depends on large investments in equipment.

"Nevertheless, the fact is that, with all that has been done, with all the new capital and energy that have been poured into industry, the results do not seem to be adequate. It is as though there was a brake on the machine somewhere, as though the belts were slipping and failing to transmit the power.

"It is a depressing fact that, for the last twenty years, the greater part of all the gains achieved in industry by the genius of invention and management, and by the accumulation of capital, has been offset to the wage-earning population by the higher cost of food and raw materials.

"Now, this is a grave situation. It looks as though mankind was losing out in its contest with nature. It revives the Malthusian theory that population naturally increases faster than the food supply. We know it to be true that as population grows more dense it becomes more difficult to provide for it, except as increasing knowledge gives larger command over the natural resources. Aside from man's ability to improve the methods of production, the tendency is against him. It is a steady pull against the current. Malthus published his famous essay on population about 100 years ago, and at that time, before the influence of machinery and the possibilities of scientific research were fully appreciated, the outlook for the masses was thought to be very gloomy. The command of man over the resources of nature did not seem to be equal to providing even a miserable living for the population, not to speak of ameliorating their condition, and intelligent and kindly people, the leaders of society, seriously discussed starvation, plague, and war, as perhaps necessary means of limiting the population.

"But the development of the steam engine and the locomotive changed this situation rapidly. It opened up the Mississippi Valley and other fertile regions and gave relief to the world. But relief for how long? The rise of prices in the last twenty years shows that the problem was only pushed back. It is a problem that never can be finally disposed of so long as population continues to increase. And there are no more Mississippi Valleys to come to the rescue. There are extensive areas of land in South America, in Africa, and Asia, but they will not be occupied rapidly. There is land in Canada, and, as I have said, we have nowhere near reached the limit of production in this country, but you are as familiar with these conditions as I am.

Prices and Unrest.

"I do not wish to play the part of an alarmist. I don't say that the world is on the brink of starvation. The great increase in food production which we have had in this country during the war shows something of our latent possibilities, but this production is stimulated by very high prices. I want to emphasize what I believe to be the chief factor in the social situation, the economic pressure and unrest occasioned by the rising cost of the common necessaries of life.

"Nobody is responsible for it, but when great numbers of people are disappointed and discontented somebody is always held to be responsible. The most thoughtful students of history have held that all the great crises and upheavals of society have been due to economic causes, to direct economic pressure upon the people, rather than to logical reasoning or intellectual leadership. Twice in my own time I have seen the monetary system and standard of value nearly upset in this country, because times were hard; once by the greenback party and once by the free silver party. In both of these instances the farmers were the chief complainants, and the grievance was that prices were too low; now it is the wage-earning class and the grievance is that prices are too high.

"The arguments for greenbacks and free silver were all washed away in the periods of prosperity which followed, but the same type of agitator is always on hand—just as ready to argue from high prices as low prices, and always finding the most effective appeal in the play upon class suspicion and class prejudice. The solution of our problem lies in reducing our credit inflation out of savings and getting back to a rational economic basis."

THE STAGE ON THE EVE OF HEAVY ACTION

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

THE general recognition of Lionel Barrymore as of the first line of American actors is leading John D. Williams, his manager, to cast about for rôles in which his talents are permitted their full scope. Announcement has already been made that he will be seen early in the new year as Mouzon in Brieux's "The Red Robe," and there is now a well authenticated report that his rôle to follow will be the title part in "Cyrano de Bergerac."

London has recently been finding a revival of "Cyrano," with Robert Loraine in the part, greatly to its liking, and this fact is probably not without weight in determining Mr. Williams's choice of the play. At all events, he is said to be now in negotiation for the American rights. In this country, of course, the rôle is identified almost exclusively with Richard Mansfield, but the part was played here also by Charles Richman.

John Barrymore will also have a new play late in the season—according to the story, another work by Sem Benelli, the author of "The Jest." The latter piece, with the two Barrymores still in the cast, will reopen at the Plymouth Theatre early in September, and will continue for approximately ten weeks. With the withdrawal of Lionel Barrymore to act the Brieux play, John Barrymore will then turn again to "Redemption," and will act this piece at the Plymouth for another span of ten weeks. Then—also at the Plymouth—will come the new Benelli play.

This arrangement means, of course, that John Barrymore will spend the entire season in New York, and it seems probable also that his brother will do the same. With Ethel Barrymore on the horizon in a new comedy, it bids fair to be a Barrymore year.

The part played by George M. Cohan in the touching up of plays sponsored by himself and partner has long been general knowledge, and in the case of "The Royal Vagabond" the making over process was so extensive that program credit of some sort became obligatory. Hence the word "Cohanized," and with its discovery Mr. Cohan has apparently made up his mind to leave anonymity behind him and claim credit where credit is due. Thus "The Acquittal," the next Cohan & Harris production in these parts, also has been Cohanized, and the announcements admit it. Aside from the question of credit, the commercial value of the Cohan name is incalculable to a play. As for "The Acquittal," the original and still major author was Rita Weiman, and the piece probably will succeed "The Royal Vagabond" at the Cohan & Harris Theatre some time in September.

Despite the fact that it is the exception, rather than the rule, to devote certain theatres exclusively to certain brands of entertainment in this country, there have been several instances of the identification, for a considerable number of seasons, of a particular playwright with a particular playhouse. The latest case of this kind to attract attention is that of Owen Davis and the Playhouse. "At 9:45" is the fourth of Davis's melodramas to be produced at the Playhouse. "The Family Cupboard" had a run of 178 performances; "Sinners" played there 243 times, "Forever After" played 344 times, a majority of this run being at the Playhouse. It is, of course, too early to speak for the present incumbent.

Mr. Davis's association with the Playhouse, however, comes far from constituting a record. Winchell Smith, for example, has run up a considerably higher total of performances at the Gaiety Theatre with "The Fortune Hunter," "Turn to the Right," and "Lightnin'," to say nothing of "Officer 666," in the writing of which he was a silent partner. And George M. Cohan has had some half dozen or more of his plays at the Cohan Theatre since it was opened with "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" in February of 1910.

After all, the new Shipman-Wilde comedy will be known not as "Dark Horses" but as "First Is Last," which was one of the four or five titles previously announced and then passed by. It will be produced in Long Branch on Aug. 11 and will be brought to the Maxine Elliott Theatre during the week of Aug. 25.

Grace George will begin her New York season considerably earlier this year than has been her custom in seasons a-gone. She will be seen at the Vanderbilt Theatre during the week of Aug. 11, presenting a golf-course comedy entitled "She Would and She Did," by Mark W. Reed.

The week beyond this will bring at least three more new plays to the city, and probably four or five. Miss George, as stated, will begin her season at the Vanderbilt; the Somerset Maugham comedy, "Too Many Husbands," will be produced at the Hudson Theatre, and Mark Swan's farce, "A Regular Feller," will be presented at the Cort. The Harris Theatre is also ready for occupancy, but the sudden shifting of "Nightie Night" from that house to the Princess leaves the former theatre in a receptive mood.

John Cort's plans for the season include the presentation of the Sicilian actress, Mimi Aguglia, in an English-speaking rôle, but the play will apparently not be the "Claudia" of Edith Ellis, which was tested in Pittsburgh some time ago with Mme. Aguglia in the leading rôle. Mr. Cort plans also to present the Earl Derr Biggers-Christopher Morley comedy, "Three's a Crowd," at the Cort Theatre on Sept. 29, and Crane Wilbur's "A Fool's Game" will be offered a little later. Musically speaking, there will be "Just a Minute," a successor to "Listen, Lester," at the Knickerbocker in September, and Eddie Leonard of vaudeville fame, in "Roly Poly Eyes," a musical comedy cut to his measure and named after the song which has stood him in best stead.

Walter Hast's production of the Cosmo Hamilton play, "Scandal," which has had Chicago by the ears for six months or more, will not be seen in New York until September. The original plans called for the production of the piece at the Shubert Theatre on Aug. 18. Mr. Hast, encouraged by the reception which "Scandal" has been receiving in the West, is preparing a variety of other plays. One of these will be "The Master of Ballantrae," a dramatization of the Robert Louis Stevenson story, in which Walker Whiteside will be seen. Another will be a new Cosmo Hamilton opus entitled "An Exchange of Wives"; a third will be "Eve and the Man," by Frederick Bruegger, a Chicago newspaper man, and still another will be a dramatization of the Leroy Scott story, "A Daughter of Two Worlds."

One of those freaks of the stage which enthusiasm and unsophistication occasionally combine to bring about was recently played for a week in Atlantic City, and furnished a theatrical milestone to which the inhabitants of that resort can look back for years to come. The play, a piece entitled "Tin Pajamas," was acted at the Apollo Theatre the week before last, and was to have played at the National Theatre in Washington during the week just ended—but didn't. On the strength of the title, which seemed to indicate a touch of the risque, the house in Atlantic City was sold out for the Monday night performance, and from 9 o'clock on, according to the veracious manager of the theatre, the audience began to depart in twos, threes, and larger units. The combined attendance at the remaining seven performances, it was said, barely equaled that of the opening night. The play, it is safe to say, is among the attractions which will not be produced in New York in the early Fall.

Mr. Hitchcock has been busily putting together his "Hitchy-Koo" during recent weeks, and events have now reached such a stage which seems to justify an out-of-town opening on Aug. 18. It will probably be late in September, however, before the attraction is seen in New York.

The indubitable rewards of play producing tempted the organization of still another firm of theatrical managers during the week—the members of the firm being Wendell Phillips Dodge, late press representative for David Belasco, and Willy Pogany, the artist and designer. Their first production, to be made in New York in October, will be of "Esther," a "stupendous and costly" presentation of a play by the Baroness Leonie de Souiny. It will be followed, if all goes well, by a variety of other plays.

Frances White and William Rock, having finished with London and "Hullo, America," are already on their way back to these shores—presumably on the Adriatic in company with the "Chu Chin Chow" costumes. Mr. Ziegfeld has already secured their services, and they will be seen in the new midnight revue on the New Amsterdam roof as well as in the 9 o'clock entertainment.

Martin Brown's play, "An Innocent Idea," is said to be a travesty upon the bedroom drama now so popular. Brown is the playwright whose first comedy, "A Very Good Young Man," was produced early last season by Arthur Hopkins, and who was said at the time to have some half a dozen other plays in readiness. "An Innocent Idea," will have its first production in Baltimore on Aug. 25, with Robert Emmett Keane and John Westley in the leading rôles.

Mr. Woods's earnest desire to attach the title, "Not Tonight, Josephine," to one of his offerings of the season finally has been gratified, and the farce hitherto known as "Little Love Birds" will be thus titled when it comes to the Eltinge on Sept. 1. It was the producer's early ambition to call Mr. Maugham's comedy by this title, but vigorous objections from the author are said to have resulted.

Into the limbo of the forgotten have dug the insatiable librettists once more, and this time emerged with the old Tommy Ross comedy, "Checkers." It will be made—already has been made, in fact—into a musical comedy by Edgar Allan Woolf. It will be produced out of town on Sept. 8.

Mr. Morosco's substitution of "Civilian Clothes" for "Madame Sappho" as his initial New York offering of the season means that the latter play will be first revealed in Chicago instead of the metropolis. That interesting event is scheduled to take place on the 24th of August, with the Olympic Theatre the scene of action. This is the comedy written by the Hattons for Grace Valentine's starring purposes.

BUCKING THE PLAY MARKET

So much has been said in recent seasons of the difficulties attendant upon the marketing of a play that the case of a manuscript sold easily and rapidly and produced promptly now takes on the semblance of novelty. The precedent-defying author in this respect was Ralph E. Dyar and his play "A Voice in the Dark," which opened at the Republic last Monday night.

Dyar, furthermore, was handicapped by the fact that he was not only unknown—which, presumably, all playwrights are until they have sold a play—but also some three thousand miles away from the play market. Dyar was in Spokane, attached to the staff of The Spokane Spokesman-Review; A. H. Woods, whom he wanted to reach, was in New York.

Dyar chose a simple and direct method of approach. Part of his work in connection with the Spokane paper consisted of the writing of sales letters. He had sold a number of advertising contracts by correspondence; he knew thoroughly the technique of the sales letter, and he felt that there was no reason why a melodrama, as well as other merchandise, could not be sold by a good letter.

Dyar says that he selected A. H. Woods as his first prospect after reading an article in the American Magazine last Winter in which that manager touched upon the habit of making quick decisions. On Dec. 7 of last year, at all events—several days before the play was completed—Dyar wrote Woods a letter calculated to intrigue his attention and focus it upon the merchandise which he had to offer.

Because this is a technical account of how a play was sold by correspondence, and to the end that other prospective playwrights may profit to the full thereby, Mr. Dyar's letter is here reproduced in its entirety:

"I think I have hit upon a decidedly novel idea in dramatic construction. In the belief that you will be willing to consider its possibilities, I am outlining the idea below.

"In the plays that are built backward, like 'On Trial,' certain characters are brought on to tell a story or present evidence; then, instead of merely listening to them talk, the hand of time is turned back and the scene which the character described is acted out before our eyes.

"Now, suppose that in one of these backward-built plays a woman who has important testimony to give regarding a murder is totally deaf. Suppose, further, that another character is a man who is stone blind.

"How can we turn back the hand of time and act out the testimony of a deaf woman and a blind man? It is, of course, simple enough, though no one has ever thought of doing it.

"In the case of the deaf character, we will present the scene just as it appeared to her. There will be action, but no sound. Lips will move in speech, but no voice will be heard. It will be like a passage from a movie with actors in the flesh instead of their pictures. It will seem to the audience as if they, too, had temporarily lost their hearing.

"Then in the case of the blind man's testimony, the scene will be played as it appeared to him, i. e., in the dark. The audience will overhear (as the blind man did) a conversation bearing on the crime to be solved but will see absolutely nothing. It will be the same as if the auditors, too, for the duration of this scene, had been stricken blind.

"This idea I have developed into a three-act melodrama. A short synopsis of this is inclosed.

"An added novelty is that the scene of the deaf woman's testimony, first enacted without sounds or voices, is played over again from the standpoint of another character who heard what was said, and this supplies one of the necessary links in solving the mystery of the murder.

"I am giving you the first chance at this play and idea, Mr. Woods, because of your reputation for giving quick decisions. That is obviously very desirable when one has a novelty to market.

"In case my idea strikes you as being a good one, let me know, and the play—which is just being finished—will be sent you immediately, the understanding being that an early reading will be given it. If you don't care for the idea I will appreciate a prompt reply to that effect."

The letter was mailed under a special delivery stamp. It brought prompt results. Six days later a telegram came from Woods, asking that the author send his play immediately and promising immediate consideration. That evening the final pages of the play were typed, and on the following day, Dec. 14, the manuscript was sent to New York. A telegram accepting it came on New Year's Eve—and modern salesmanship was vindicated.

True, the original Dyar play was somewhat—perhaps extensively—revised by Willard Mack before it came to New York, but this, if anything, emphasizes the success of Dyar's sales method, since it is presumably more difficult to sell an unfinished product than a finished one.

Dyar, incidentally, is a native of Minnesota and a graduate of the university of that State. As a senior he wrote a three-act farce which the undergraduates acted and which is still being produced by amateur bodies the country over. Other than this, he had had no training for the stage, and equipped himself "in his spare time," as the advertisements generally put it, by reading the many volumes written by the technicians of the stage. The idea for "A Voice in the Dark"—the play was originally called "Look and Listen"—came to him at a movie show.

THE NEW PLAYS

ENTER, with appropriate ceremonies, the theatrical season of 1919-'20. The events of July constituted a mere advance skirmish, but with the beginning of August the heavier pieces are brought into action. The premières of the week will be four in number—three new plays and the revival of a popular old one.

THE CHALLENGE—Tuesday night at the Selwyn Theatre.

The battle of the Bolshevist plays to be the first to be revealed upon Broadway will be won on Tuesday night by Eugene Walter's newest drama, "The Challenge." To quote the prospectus: "While 'The Challenge' touches a vital phase of modern life, its pivotal interest is in its gripping love story." "Vital phase of modern life," it is betraying no secret to reveal, has reference to the social scheme of things and the efforts of those who would remold them nearer to the heart's desire.

Holbrook Blinn will be starred in the piece, and the supporting company will embrace Lotus Robb, Ruth Benson, Allan Dinehart, Georgie Lawrence, Louise Macintosh, Wilson Reynolds, Ben Johnson, Charles A. Sellon, Fred Karr, Leonard Doyle, Hallett Thompson, Frank Torpey, C. M. Cleve, Francis S. Merlin, F. C. Bronson, A. D. Glaser, C. R. Brown, William T. Morgan, David Landau, Vici Loucelli, Herbert Bostwick, and Frank Vogel.

THE RED DAWN—Wednesday night at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre.

This will be the second Bolshevist drama of the week, being the work of, and produced by, Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation." "In order to prove his contention that Bolshevism or red socialism is detrimental to every principle of law and religion," runs the announcement, "he has visualized a South Sea island on which the theories are being put into every day practice. * * * While the author's main purpose in writing the play was to indict the contentions of the radicals in as thorough and realistic a manner as possible, he has also included a number of comedy characters that relieve the dramatic intensity of many of the scenes." And there you are.

NIGHTIE NIGHT—Thursday night at the Princess Theatre.

The third offering of the week will relieve the Bolshevist tension somewhat, as the title indicates with considerable clarity. The story concerns wives and ex-show girls and other things that go to make farces.

CHU CHIN CHOW—Thursday night at the Century Theatre.

Strikes have failed to stop "Chu," as the profession slangily refers to it. It was originally produced here two seasons ago, and seemingly there are innumerable seasons of prosperity still ahead of it. The postponement of the première was made necessary by the fact that some 200 costumes are aboard the Adriatic, which will not dock until about the middle of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Coburn, who have been inspecting the wooded portions of New England for a few weeks, will return to their old rôles in "The Better 'Ole" tomorrow night at the Booth. De Wolf Hopper, who has been playing Old Bill in Mr. Coburn's absence, will again take to the road in the piece, opening in Toronto on Aug. 25. The play is now in its last few weeks at the Booth, incidentally, since another attraction has been announced for that playhouse on Sept. 8.

LIVING DOWN A REPUTATION

The tendency of the theatre to regard its workers as specialists—be they actors or authors—is well illustrated by the case of Owen Davis. Having made a reputation as a writer of the ten-twenty-thirty school of drama, he has now spent years in trying to get rid of it. Today he can write successful Broadway plays—but in the offices of the managers they still remember his reputation rather than his recent achievements.

By OWEN DAVIS.

IT has taken me twenty years to get even so slight a start on the ladder as I have now, and twenty years of very hard work. In that twenty years I have written a preposterous amount of rubbish and out of it have earned a little and learned a little—just enough of each to make me hungry for more.

I always wanted to write plays, but by some queer twist of fate I sidetracked my ambition when I entered Harvard and plunged myself into a perfect orgy of geology and chemistry. For a number of years I applied myself earnestly to the study of geology and its kindred sciences, and I claim to be the best paleontologist of all the American playwrights. I am forced to admit, however, that I can't remember much of it, and if I could I don't know what good it would do me. I worked a year or two in the South after I left Harvard in 1894, and then suddenly remembered that Nature had meant me for a playwright and took the next train to New York, bringing with me a lot of confidence and twelve dollars. I rather pride myself on the fact that the twelve dollars went first. After having a perfectly wonderful year or two of chasing rainbows I settled down as a writer of popular-priced melodramas.

I wrote them as frequently and with as little effort as an ardent young freshman writes home for money—as a matter of fact, when Al Woods and I were doing our worst I turned out one every four weeks for almost ten years. I doubt if it would be possible for me to say just how much fun this was. I am not sure if it was a habit or a vice, but, in any case, it tended to a rather strenuous sort of life and I doubt if fate has anything in store for me that I would exchange for the memories of those times.

After Al Woods reformed, and the pictures began to drive the old-fashioned melodrama into the discard, I found myself confronted by a new problem. My old trade was going fast, and it was impossible to make any one even so much as consider me as a serious dramatist. I had made money and friends, but I had become so identified with "The Gambler of the West" school of melodrama that when I dared to put myself forward as a Broadway playwright I was met by a perfect storm of abuse and ridicule. This lasted for some years, but so did I. It may crop up for a few years longer, but so will I. As a matter of fact, the only way to prevent me from writting plays is to kill me. It isn't so much that I want to do it, but, as I said before, it has grown to be what one could call either a habit or a vice.

And so the success of "At 9:45" at the Playhouse, closely following the season's run of Alice Brady in another play of my writing, "Forever After," is extremely gratifying. Having achieved those two successes I would like to write eloquently of the abject attitude of the theatrical managers as a result thereof. But I can't do it—I haven't time. I am too busy trying to bully one of them into producing another play, and, for some reason which I am afraid I couldn't have understood without the experience of those twenty years, he doesn't seem to be quite sure that I know any more about plays than he does.

This is red-blooded drama

Hon. Claude Kitchin

Hon. Claude Kitchin, Leader of Congress, said:

"This Play Sounds the Death Knell of Bolshevism. It's the Greatest Play in 20 Years."

Senator Overman said:

"A Tremendous Drama—It Will Stir Our Nation."

SEE
- Bolshevism at work.
- The Red Socialist and I. W. W. upsetting the security of the nation.
- The combination eating into the heart of law and order, breeding uprisings all over the country.
- The propagation of heinous crime.
- The development of intrigue far more insidious than the despicable Germans ever dreamed of.

APARTMENTS

Won't you step into one of these apartments that are part of the big nest of homes that it is such a joy to live in?

Everything in good taste, a quiet rug, blue, rose, or brown hangings, shaded lamps, a deep comfortable couch, inviting chairs. This is the living room. Mahogany, ivory or walnut in the bedroom, a little reading table, great closets with shelves, and electric lights, and everything just ready for the occupant to come in. What a view! Large windows overlooking the park, or giving a glimpse of the river, looking South, West, North or East. Sunken tube, and a shower, everything very convenient and up-to-date. No kitchen nor maid's room to bother with, where this service is given you in the rent without extra charge. Really, all the joy of a home without any of its cares. One room and bath, two, three, four or five, in fact as many as you need, are to be had.

Do step down there and look at one of those cozy apartments to live in next winter. But hurry, for others are looking there too.

FACTS

The greatest novel of the world's most popular author in pictures. The countless thousands who read the story will insist upon seeing it—the few who were not so fortunate can't afford to miss it.

Romance that appeals, adventure that thrills, intrigue that makes one's blood boil, mystery that baffles, red-blooded people that live are a few of the ingredients used in the story's concoction. The action is pyramided throughout until it reaches its pinnacle in a climax that is startling and satisfying.

A surpassingly beautiful and unusually talented girl enacts the chief role, surrounded by a cast that is exceptional.

The director, known to every "movie" fan in the country, holds a place second to none in the industry. His name to a picture means artistic interpretation.

The sum and substance of the picture's worth is emphasized in the fact that the most comprehensive releasing organization in the world has put it out as a "Special."

VARIOUS

By JAMES GIBBONS HUNEKER

COLERIDGE quotes Sir Joshua Reynolds as declaring that: "The greatest man is he who forms the taste of a nation; the next greatest is he who corrupts it." It is an elastic epigram and not unlike the rule which is poor because it won't work both ways. All master reformers, heretics and rebels at first were great corrupters. "Corruption" so-called is a prime factor in their propaganda. Buddha, Jesus, and Moses; Artus and Aristophanes, Mohammed and Napoleon, Paul and Augustine, Luther and Calvin, Voltaire and Rousseau, Darwin and Newman, Liszt and Wagner, Kant and Schopenhauer—here are a few names of men who undermined the current beliefs and practices of their epoch whether for good or for evil. Rousseau has been accused by Pierre Lasserra as being the greatest corrupter in modern history; yet his name will always be associated with the Constitution of the United States of America. Tom Paine has been called a "dirty little atheist," but he wrote "The Rights of Man." In prose of unequaled force and limpidity Pascal denounced the Jesuits as corrupters of youth—poor, persecuted Jesuits, who were the "Yellow Peril" of that time. Nevertheless, Dr. Georg Brandes, an "intellectual" and a philosophic anarch, wrote to Friedrich Nietzsche: "I, too, love Pascal. But even as a young man I was on the side of the Jesuits against Pascal. Wise man, it was they who were right; he did not understand them; but they understood him and . . . they published his 'Provincial Letters' with notes. The best edition is that of the Jesuits."

Were not Titian, Rubens, and Rembrandt the three unspeakable devils of painting for William Blake? Loosely speaking, then, it doesn't much matter whether we consider a great man as either a regenerator or a corrupter. It all depends on your critical angle of vision. Taine called Napoleon a bandit notwithstanding the idolatries of his contemporaries. Nor does the case of Nietzsche differ much from that of his philosophic forerunners. He scolded Schopenhauer, although he borrowed his dialectic tools, as he later mocked at the sincerest friendship of his solitary life—his love for Richard Wagner. We know that the most "objective"—comical old categories, "objective" and "subjective"—philosophies are tinged by the temperaments of their makers; perhaps the chief characteristic of philosophers is their unphilosophic contempt for fellow-thinkers. This trait Schopenhauer displayed when he abused Hegel & Co., Berlin, Ltd. Nietzsche attacked Wagner after writing that lucid and comprehensive study of him, "Richard Wagner and Baireuth." Wagner was a bitter polemist and didn't spare Meyerbeer and other operatic truats. He was an amateur philosopher, his rickety system adorned with plumes borrowed from Feuerbach, Schelling, and Schopenhauer. But Arthur Schopenhauer was endowed with a more powerful, more original intellect than either Wagner or Nietzsche. He "corrupted" both, though it may be admitted that their intellectual and artistic soil was primed for just such corruption. And Schopenhauer, gay old misogynist, was materialist enough to echo an epigram attributed to Fontenelle: "To be happy a man must have a good stomach and a wicked heart." In other words, if your stomach is sound your soul will take care of itself. All Hobbes, Destutt Tracy, Cabanis, Helvetius, and Condillac are in that phrase.

But it is not my intention to stray among the pleasant groves of speculation, taking an occasional potshot at the strange fauna of metaphysic or admiring its many-colored flora. Some one wrote asking me if "Manette Salomon," by de Goncourt—the brothers Edmond and Jules—to which reference had been recently made in this department, had been translated into English; also if it were the only fiction about art and artists. I can't say yes or no as to the translation; if it is not, it should be; but it is safe to say that "Manette" is the best novel dealing entirely with paint and painters that I know of. Fiction about art and artists is rare; that is, good fiction, not the stuff daily ground out by publishing mills for the gallery gods. A classic example in American literature is "The Marble Faun," by Hawthorne. "Romola," by George Eliot, is atmospheric with Florentine art and the genius of place. However, it is to the French that we must go for such literature, "Manette" being a notable example. It depicts the spiritual and physical decadence of a splendid painting talent, Coriolis, and contains veracious pictures of the pre-impressionists days in Paris. Balzac in "The Unknown Masterpiece" has left a model. His Frenhofer is the first of the impressionists withal, a fumbler of genius. In both Daudet and de Maupassant there are stories clustered about the artistic guild. "Strong as Death," by de Maupassant, is long enough to be called a novel, (roman,) though it is but an expanded episode, and a mighty interesting one, even a touching one, for the usually impassive Guy. Daudet described a Paris Salon on varnishing day in his accustomed facile, febrile style; but it stems from Goncourt and Zola. Zola's "His Masterpiece" ("L'Oeuvre") is one of his best-written books. It was said to be a favorite of his, and it justifies his taste. The much-belauded fifth chapter is a faithful transcription of the first Salon of Rejected Painters (Salon des refusés) at Paris in 1863. Napoleon III., after social and political pressure had been brought to bear on him, had consented to a special Salon within the official Salon at the Palais de l'Industrie, where the rejected work of the young lunatics who wished to paint purple turkeys, vermilion water, and black sunsets would be harbored. Ivory hallucinations and girls with carmilion-colored eyes were not barred. It is an enormously clever book, this chiefly deriving from "Manette Salomon" and Balzac's Frenhofer. Claude Lantier is said to be the portrait of Paul Cézanne, a schoolmate and friend of Zola at Aix-en-Provence. When I made the trip from Marseilles to Aix Cézanne still lived, but I had been warned not to mention the name of Zola, who shows Cézanne in this novel an impotent groper after impossible ideals. The irritable Paul would go into spasms of rage when Zola was referred to in his presence. Imbecile, Traitor, Charlatan! These were sample expressions. A reading of "L'Oeuvre" at once convinces you that the artistic procedures of Claude Lantier and Paul Cézanne are diametrically different. Claude failed and hanged himself. There are contemporary critics who consider Cézanne the greatest master of the impressionist group. But the struggle for artistic veracity on the part of Zola's sorry hero is not unlike the case of Manet. "The Breakfast on the Grass," described by Zola, was actually the title and the subject of a Manet canvas that had scandalized Paris at this period. The fantastic idea of a nude female stretched upon the grass at an al fresco banquet, while the other figures were clothed and in their right mind—all this was too much for a purblind public and hostile critics; although there are many examples in Italian renaissance painting of the same style of composition. The picture became notorious. Manet, like Richard Wagner, knew the uses of advertising.

Poe, Hawthorne, Oscar Wilde, Robert Louis Stevenson, inter alia, have dealt with the theme pictorial, and Paul Bourget in his thrice-charming story, "The Lady Who Lost Her Painter." Henry James has written delightful tales, such as "The Liar," "The Real Thing," and "The Tragic Muse"—this a full-fledged novel in three volumes—in which artists appear and live their lives. But it is the particular psychologic problem involved, rather than theorizing about art, that steers the cunning pen of James. We all recall the woman in "The Liar," who destroyed the portrait of her husband because it revealed to her, at least, the secret of his moral infirmity. In this story John Singer Sargent has been accredited as the psychologist of the brush. There is a nice, fresh young fellow in "The Tragic Muse," who, weak-spined as he is, prefers, at the last, his palette and brush to the charms and wealth of Julia Dallow and her ambitious plans for his political career. In "The Real Thing" we recognize—Henry James would call it the "emotion of recognition"—one of those unerring strokes that prove the writer to be master-psychologist among English novelists. Any discerning painter will tell you that the value of a model who can take the "pose" far outshines crude naturalism. It is the suggestiveness of the pose with its pictorial implications that sets moving the imagination of the artist. Upon this thesis the novelist has built a semi-pathetic, amusing, and striking fable.

There are painters and sculptors scattered throughout English fiction—shall we ever forget Thackeray and Clive Newcome? Ouida has not missed weaving Tyrian purples into the gorgeous patterns of her romantic painters. And Disraeli. And George Bernard Shaw—there is a painting creature in his "Love Among the Artists." (I contend that an admirable novelist was killed in Mr. Shaw when he deserted fiction for the playhouse. He won't agree with me, but I should willingly part with all his prefaces for another "Byron Cashel's Profession.") But it is to George Moore we must go for fiction of this sort. He has devoted more of his pages to paint and painters than other latter-day novelists. The reason is that George Moore went to Paris, there to study art, and he drifted into the Julian atelier just as would any likely young chap with a well-filled purse and hazy notions concerning art. Those early experiences were not wasted, they cropped up in his stories and critical studies. He became the critical pioneer in England of French impressionist art painters, the champion of Manet, Monet, Degas, and the rest. He even declared, in an article of rare acumen, that if Jemmy Whistler had been a heavier man, with more beef and brawn and beer, as was Rubens, for example, the spider-waisted American painter might have been as great an artist as Velasquez. To the weighing scales, fellow-artists! retorted Whistler; nevertheless, the bolt of Mr. Moore reached the mark. Whistler's remarks about the Irish critic, especially after the Eden litigation, were, so it is reported, ot "fit to print."

In "Spring Days," the first volume of Mr. Moore's trilogy—"A Modern Lover" and "Mike Fletcher" are the other two—we are shown a young painter who thinks more of petticoats than paint. "Mike Fletcher" is the most virile and, for some of us the quintessence of Moore, has its share of paint talk. In "A Modern Lover" the hero is an artist who succeeds in the fashionable world by painting pretty, artificial portraits, thereby winning wealth, popular applause, and official approbation. He also makes love in a fascinating fashion—the secret of his mundane success. This same Lewis Seymour lives and paints modish London beauties in rose color. He may be found in Paris and New York. He is a type. The sitter for this portrait is said to have been Sir Frederick Leighton, a statement I accept on its face value, and one that Mr. Moore would probably vehemently deny. But his irony must have entered the souls of a hundred celebrated humbugs; that is, if they had souls to boast. "A Modern Lover," despite the rewriting and consequent defacement of the original design, is distinctly a painter's novel and the best of its kind, were it not that subsequently the novelist wrote a masterpiece, "Mildred Lawson," to be found in the volume entitled "Celibates"—a Balzacian title, by the way. Masterly in analysis and description, this story chiefly deals with art. Mildred, a selfish English girl without heart, soul, or talent, studies in the Julian atelier and goes to Fontainebleau during the Summer vacation. Naturally, no one has ever described the "Forest" better than Flaubert in "Sentimental Education"; Flaubert, who wrote better than any one else save Balzac. In this great canvas of Parisian life there are marvelous evocations. There is a semi-burlesque painter Pellerin, who first reads all the literature of aesthetics before he draws a line, and poses his sitters à la Van Dyck, Rubens, Gainsborough, or Titian; in a word, the man of precedent. De Goncourt, too, has excelled in his impressions of the "Forest" and its painters; in particular, François Millet.

It is only just to Mr. Moore to say that you can't find Mildred Lawson in Flaubert or De Goncourt; no, not even in Balzac, whose work is the very matrix of modern fiction. She is her own cruel, perverse, Moorovian self, and she lives here or London or in the Philippines. Elsewhere I have classed her as one of the most disagreeable heroines in fiction, an inky sister of Hedda Gabler and Eunice Sprague, (in Edith Wharton's "Custom of the Country.")

All the one-time novel theories of "plein air" impressionism are discussed in Zola's "His Masterpiece," yet the work, as a whole, lacks the fine-fibred style and clairvoyance of "Manette Salomon"; that breviary for painters which, in 1867, anticipated the experimentings, the discoveries, and the practice of the naturalistic and impressionist groups, running the gamut from Manet, Monet, to Cézanne, Maufra, and Paul Gauguin. The book is crowded with verbal pictures of art students, atelier and open-air life; painting was still one of the romantic arts when De Goncourt wrote. No such psychological manual of the painter appeared before or since "Manette Salomon." The celibate bias of the brothers is revealed in the leading motive—oh, that musty, fusty melodramatic idea—which is the degradation of a man's artistic ideals because of the woman—Manette his model—he marries. It was Goncourt who introduced Japanese art to Europe; the brothers were friends of the late M. Bing, a pioneer collector in Paris. And they foresaw the future of fiction as well as painting.

ANNOUNCING
The August Sale of Fine ORIENTAL RUGS

In the Bamberger Auditorium
Sixth Floor, Beginning Monday

Every Rug in the Entire Collection Reduced in Price from 10% to 25%

Many people are awaiting this announcement.

And why?

Simply because Bamberger's August Oriental Rug Sales have come to mean something BIG and REAL in the minds of those who appreciate true Oriental rug beauty.

This sale means SAVINGS.

That is another big reason. People know that this is their opportunity to select Oriental masterpieces at prices which are any way from 10% to 25% below OLD PRICES.

That is virtually a double reduction because Bamberger's old prices are so exceptionally low.

Consider Oriental rug prices today. Consider the conditions abroad which have in many instances wiped out whole communities of Oriental rug weavers, destroying forever the genius which was responsible for some of the masterful creations which today adorn American homes.

Oriental rugs are growing scarcer and higher.

Naturally, lovers of fine Oriental rugs will appreciate the timely significance of this sale, and will buy liberally.

Because of the very unusual nature of this event this year and the immense number of rugs involved in the collection, we have moved the entire department to the AUDITORIUM, sixth floor, for the month of AUGUST.

This change will afford connoisseurs of Oriental rugs the opportunity of carefully choosing the pieces they wish to buy, in an atmosphere which is in keeping with the rugs themselves.

You will be particularly interested in the offerings of Persian and Chinese rugs. The prices will tempt you.

A splendid group of room size carpets is offered at unusually interesting prices. These rugs have all been selected with discriminating care.

Equally is this true of the mats and "scatter" pieces, as well as the small "throw" sizes that so many women love to select for cozy corner decoration. Among these the Beloochistans and Mossouls are most popular.

It is well to remember that you can select your Oriental rug at Bamberger's with absolute confidence in the stated quality and value. Your information will be based upon our own thorough familiarity with Oriental rugs of every sort.

You will appreciate this sale.

You will like the atmosphere of choosing in the new Oriental rug mart in Bamberger's Auditorium, Sixth Floor.

The Bamberger Midsummer Sale of Furs Features Hudson Seal Coats

There are many August sales of furs, all meriting some of your attention, and some meriting all of your attention.

This Bamberger Sale is one of the latter—a most unusual August Sale of beautiful fur garments, representing the highest type of fur-wrap creations.

During the sale a feature is made of Hudson Seal coats (seal dyed muskrat), self-trimmed, or fashioned with skunk, beaver, squirrel, or ringtail opossum.

The Hudson Seal wraps are modeled in Dolmans, Short Sport Coats, and the favored full-flare effects, with large collars and cuffs.

Among the other sport coats and conservative wraps the following furs are featured: Near seal, seal dyed Cony of the finest quality, fashioned with dyed skunk, beaver and natural squirrel.

One of the vital reasons for this mid-summer sale is SAVINGS. It will be impossible after the sale to select these furs at prices anywhere near the figures at which they are marked now.

The sale is held on the Third Floor.

New Fall Frocks for Women Alluringly Priced at 25.00

Inspired by an over-the-sea model of exclusive expensiveness.

A design that has been brought out for the nearing Autumn.

And that will be worn by women who realize the advantage of always being just ahead of the mode.

Done in serge of navy blue combined with georgette and made more attractive by the addition of a self-colored vestee of a "sufficient smartness," as the French would say. Button trimmings, too, that are cleverly applied.

You'll see frocks of this sort from now on where better-groomed women congregate. Why not appear in one yourself? Two other styles at this price.

Perfect fitting sizes from 34 to 44.

All that a dress should be at 25.00.

Bamberger's—Third Floor.

Sewing Machine Prices Are Bound to Go Higher

Why wait until you have to pay more for that new machine you have been thinking for some time about buying?

The choice of one now will save you a considerable sum. You can use your old machine, if you wish, as part payment toward the purchase of a new STANDARD-ROTARY machine.

A fair price will be allowed you on your machine. In selecting a new STANDARD-ROTARY, priced at above $60.00, we will allow you not less than $12.50 on your OLD machine.

A small cash payment and easy weekly terms will place any STANDARD-ROTARY machine in your home—in time to complete the balance of your summer sewing.

STIRRING THE MUSICAL KETTLE FOR 1920

THIS week brings the first stirring of the musical kettle for 1920, and the oracular utterances of July are in a fair way to become realities in performance from mid-October till May of next year. Herbert M. Johnson, business controller of the Chicago Opera Association, recently returned to the Western city from a flying trip to New York.

Mr. Johnson announces that the annual Autumn tour of the Chicago company will start Oct. 13, and that the cities to be visited are Milwaukee, Peoria, St. Paul, Omaha, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Houston, and Little Rock. The operas will be "Aida," "La Bohème," and "Madame Butterfly."

Rosa Raisa, Sophie Braslau, Alessandro Dolci, Georges Baklanoff, Constantin Nicolay, and Virgilio Lazzaro form the cast for "Aida." In "La Bohème" will be Alessandro Bonci, Alma Gluck, Myrna Sharlow, Giacomo Rimini, and others, and in "Madame Butterfly" Yamaki Muira, Forrest Lamont, and Clarence Whitehill.

Mr. Campanini will conduct all performances of "Aida." Anna Ludmila, from the Pavley-Ourainsky ballet, will be added as première danseuse. The general director is at present abroad making further engagements at Milan.

Three men stars have been added for the later season of Campanini's company in Chicago, Boston, and New York—Carlo Galeffi, already announced; Titta Ruffo, and Tita Schipa, the last a favorite tenor for six years now in Italy, and three seasons at the Argentine Colon.

Metropolitan "Blue Bird."

Some facts have been told of the preparation of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," otherwise "L'Oiseau Bleu," which the Metropolitan's new French conductor, Albert Wolff, has turned into an opera that will be one of Mr. Gatti's chief novelties next season, along with the English version of "Parsifal."

Wilfred Pelletier, former assistant to Monteux and now to Bodanzky, has for weeks been at work on both Wolff's and Wagner's musical scores. H. E. Krehbiel is making the translation of "Parsifal." The French text of "The Blue Bird" is adapted from the Belgian poet's original play, seen here at the New Theatre.

Raymonde Delannois is to sing the boy Tyltyl, and Mary Ellis will make her début as the little sister Mytyl. Jeanne Gordon, a new contralto, will be the witch, La Fee. There are also Leon Rothier as Papa Tyl, and Robert Couzinou as The Dog, already named in a cast of sixty.

Boris Anisfeld, the Russian artist, and Edward Siedle, technical director, are now preparing the scenes for an elaborate spectacle, which it is said will equal any ever shown on the local opera stage. The scenic rehearsals will begin long before the Metropolitan singers assemble, and "The Blue Bird's" further preparation is expected to take ten weeks in all.

Maclennan for Park Season.

The Society of American Singers has received many congratulations on the addition of Francis Maclennan, the Canadian tenor, to the list of singers already engaged for its season to begin at the Park Theatre on Monday, Oct. 13.

Mr. Maclennan and his famous wife, Florence Easton, now with the Metropolitan company, have had a joint career in Europe and at home, of which their American friends are proud. They sang in Savage's first "Madame Butterfly" in this country. After six years on the Continent of Europe and two seasons at Covent Garden, London, they returned here for two years with the Chicago Opera Company.

Manhattan Concerts Planned.

To establish "a permanent place for the American concert artist in an annual series in New York City" is the plan of Gretchen F. Dick, who announces that American artists will be used exclusively in a course of five Sunday afternoon concerts to be held in the Manhattan Opera House in the Fall.

Some of those who will be heard are Mabel Garrison, Reinald Werrenrath, Sophie Braslau, John Powell, Marcia van Dresser, Florence Hinkle, Lambert Murphy, Rafaelo Diaz, Lester Donahue, Merle Alcock, Eddy Brown, Emilio de Gogorza, Amparita Farrar, Albert Spalding and Edward Morris.

Hosts to Italy's Orchestra.

Announcement has just been made of the full committee under whose auspices the Saint Cecilia Orchestra of Rome will be received in New York and sixty other American cities, opening next October at the Metropolitan Opera House. The orchestra's conductor is Bernardino Molinari.

With Otto H. Kahn as Chairman, the committee includes Frederick G. Bourne, James Byrne, Andre de Coppet, Henry P. Davison, Henry C. Frick, Robert Goelet, Myron T. Herrick, Clarence H. Mackay, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Charles H. Sabin, William K. Vanderbilt, Henry Walters, and George W. Wickersham.

THE WEEK'S CONCERTS.

The first two of the series of park concerts arranged by the National League for Woman's Service in co-operation with the International Music Festival Chorus for the five Sundays in August will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Seward Park and Washington Square.

At Seward Park the Beethoven Musical Society, with Henry Lefkowitch, conductor, will be the feature. Between numbers by the society and Mr. Lefkowitch's orchestra there will be singing by the audience. If it rains the concert will be held in the oFrward Building at 175 East Broadway.

At Washington Square the Italian Singing Societies with Gaetano Caroselli, conductor, and his military band will give the concert. Italian and American airs will be sung and played, and the audience will sing Italian folk songs of their choice. In the event of rain this concert will take place at Greenwich House, 29 Barrow Street.

The closing week of the series of free concerts at Columbia University, under the direction of Edwin Franko Goldman and the New York Military Band, will begin tomorrow.

The program for the day will include Thomas's "Mignon," overtures, Verdi's "Il Trovatore," Sullivan's "Mikado," and Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann," and smaller numbers by Massenet and Scharwenka.

Tonight the Stadium Symphony Orchestra will enter upon the sixth of the eight weeks of concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium, 138th Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

The program will include Nevada Van Der Veer, soprano, and Reed Miller, tenor, as soloists, the former singing Bemberg's "Death of Jeanne D'Arc," and the latter Gomez's "Sublime Cor."

The program of Franz Kaltenborn and his orchestra at the Central Park Mall, this afternoon at 4 o'clock, will be: Marche Militaire Francaise, Saint-Saëns; Festival Overture, Lassen; Selection, "La Bohème," Puccini; largehetto from Symphony No. 2, Beethoven; Suite of All Nations, Moszkovski; overture, "Oberon," Weber; selection, "Aida," Verdi; trombone solo, aria "Magic Flute," Mozart, Justus Pfeiffenschneider; Ave Maria, Schubert; Waltz, "Il Baccio," Arditi.

A New Music School.

Hugo Riesenfeld and Josiah Zuro announce the organization of a school of opera and ensemble to be conducted in conjunction with the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, now under the direction of Mr. Riesenfeld. Mr. Zuro will be the director and will have complete charge of the school, which will be located at the Rivoli Theatre.

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

RIALTO.—" The Career of Katherine Bush," a Paramount-Artcraft special, with Catherine Calvert, adapted by Kathryn Stuart from a novel by Elinor Glyn, directed by R. William Neill, with a cast including John Goldsworthy, Fred Burton, Crauford Kent, Mathilda Brundage, and Claire Whitney; the Magazine, a scenic describing a trip through a rubber plant; " Treating 'Em Rough," a Mack Sennett comedy; the overture to Weber's " Der Freischutz " and a selection from Victor Herbert's " The Fortune Teller," played by the orchestra, Hugo Riesenfeld and Nat W. Finston conducting; an aria from Meyerbeer's " l'Africaine," sung by Martin Brefel; Sarasate's " Romance Andalouse," played on the violin by Sascha Fideiman; the Andante from Elgar's " Pomp and Circumstance," played on the organ by Arthur Depew.

RIVOLI.—" The Dark Star," a Paramount-Artcraft special, with Marion Davies, an adaptation of a novel by Robert W. Chambers, directed by Allen Dwan, with a cast including Norman Kerry, Matt Moore, G. Butler Clonbough, Dorothy Green, Ward Crane, and James Laffey; the Pictorial; a Christie comedy; a selection from Puccini's " Tosca," played by the orchestra, Erno Rapee and Joseph Littau conducting; Meyer Helmud's " Thine My Thoughts," sung by Emanuel List, an aria from Verdi's " Ernani," sung by Rosa Legels; the Scherzo in G Minor by Joseph Callaerts, played on the organ by Firmin Swinnen.

GEORGE M. COHAN THEATRE.—D. W. Griffith's " The Fall of Babylon," opened July 21.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—Tomorrow, Tuesday, and Wednesday, " Coax Me," with June Elvidge; Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, " Square Deal Sanderson," with William S. Hart.

PLAZA.—Today, tomorrow, and Tuesday, " The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," with Douglas Fairbanks; Wednesday and Thursday, " Daybreak," with Emily Stevens; Friday and Saturday, " The City of Comrades," with Tom Moore.

LOEW'S NEW YORK.—Tomorrow, " The Lady of the Dugout," with Al Jenninks; Tuesday, " Secret Service," with Robert Warwick; Wednesday, " The Pagan God," with H. B. Warner; Thursday, " The Little Brother of the Rich "; Friday, " The Praise Agent," with Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley, and " Daring Hearts," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne; Saturday, " Cheating Herself," with Peggy Hyland; Sunday, " A Favor for a Friend," with Emmy Wehlen.

requesting that organization's co-operation in placing before the writers of the country the announcement that Universal will pay $25,000 each for four stories or scenarios suitable for Dorothy Phillips. In his letter Mr. Baker said that the stories " should be written with Miss Phillips's personality and past achievements in mind," and that they might be submitted in story or in scenario form. Stories that have already been published will be considered, he added, but their " basic ideas " must be "both new and big."

Jules Ratzowski, Director and Vice President of the Cosmos Pictures Corporation, sailed last week on the Rochambeau, en route for Cairo, Egypt, and Palestine, where scenes will be made for Cosmos's eight-reel production of George L. Hutchin's " Judarael." Before sailing he said that the picture would be one of the most costly and elaborate ever made.

Fred Stone, now an independent screen star and producer, is reported to have completed a photoplay entitled " Billy Jim " and to be in Cheyenne, Wyo., at work on his second production, " Billy Jim " was directed by Frank Borzage, and the leading woman was Millicent Fisher.

D. W. Griffith's "The Fall of Babylon" will continue at the George M. Cohan Theatre through next Sunday evening, and will be followed by Mr. Griffith's " peace edition " of " Hearts of the World," in which, it is said, the League of Nations receives its first motion-picture presentation in narrative form. While this production goes on as the third offering of the Griffith repertory season in New York, " The Fall of Babylon " will be sent on the road with several companies of dancers.

Rol Cooper Megrue will write his first photoplay for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is announced. The corporation has also contracted with Nina Wilcox Putnam for a scenario, and has purchased the screen rights to Ernest Penny's play, " All of a Sudden, Peggy," and Edward Day's melodrama, " The Round-up," both of which were popular on Broadway in past seasons. Marguerite Clark will be starred in the former.

Vivian Martin, having completed her engagement with Paramount, has come to New York to make plans for the future and says that if she signs another contract it will limit the number of photoplays in which she obligates herself to appear. In the first year of her work in Los Angeles, she adds, she appeared in eleven productions and last year her count was ten. She considers this the pace that kills quality.

By its affiliation with the Selwyns, the Shuberts, and A. H. Woods the Goldwyn Company will come into the screen rights to many well-known stage plays, among which are " The Song of Songs," " Parlor, Bedroom, and Bath," " The Guilty Man," " His Bridal Night," " Innocent," " Why Worry?" " Where Poppies Bloom," " Roads of Destiny," " The Big Chance," " Friendly Enemies," " Up in Mabel's Room," " Potash and Perlmutter," " Maytime," " A Little Journey," " 39 East," " Eyes of Youth," " Sleeping Partners," " Blind Youth," " Old Lady 31," " Tea for Three," " Twin Beds," " Lilac Time," " Why Marry," and " Under Fire."

Some of these will be produced at the studio which the company will build near New York, but an indication that the company's business will not be moved from the West at once is given in the announcements that both Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach have gone to California for indefinite periods.

Irvin Willatt, who directed " False Faces," has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to direct the production in which Hobart Bosworth will be starred. Mr. Willatt's assistant is Ernest Pasque, and among those in the cast are Jane Novak, J. P. Lockney, Otto Hoffman, Gibson Goland, and James Gordon. Work on the picture has been begun at Culver City.

Geraldine Farrar is reported to have adopted Petka Stancyvitch, a Serbian boy about 11 years old, whose father was killed early in the war and whose mother died shortly afterward.

Theatres throughout the country, it is said, have agreed to show Paramount and Artcraft pictures in Paramount-Artcraft week, beginning Aug. 31. The featured films of the week will be " The Witness for the Defense," with Elsie Ferguson, and " The Valley of the Giants," with Wallace Reid.

The Goldwyn Company announces that it is still in the market for material for photoplays. The announcement is made because reports from the company's scenario department tell of a falling off in the number of books, plays, and stories submitted since the organization of Eminent Authors, Inc., the impression in many quarters being that the writers associated in the new enterprise will supply the Goldwyn Company with all of the screen material needed. They will write for only their own company, and Goldwyn pictures will continue to be made from material purchased independently.

Major Reginald Barlow's first screen appearance since he returned from service with the army will be in " The Cinema Murder."

IN THE NEWS NET.

THE date of the opening of the big Capitol Theatre at Fifty-first Street and Broadway, like a number of other things about the house, has not yet been announced, but the Goldwyn Company is authority for the statement that E. J. Bowes, managing director of the theatre, has booked Rex Beach's " The Girl From Outside." It is added that the Capitol will open its doors " some time early in the Autumn."

The first picture to be shown in the house, according to an announcement made last June, will be Douglas Fairbanks's initial production for the United Artists' Corporation, which is now entitled " His Majesty, the American." This is scheduled for release on Sept. 1, and Rex Beach's film is expected some time after that date.

PROPAGANDA AND THE MEXICAN PROBLEM

Carranza Press Agents, First in Field, Have Long Start—Other Side Says Mere Facts Are All American Public Lacks

By WALLACE THOMPSON.
Formerly American Vice Consul at Monterey, Mexico.

THOUGHTFUL men are inquiring the reason for the present sudden uprising of the Mexican question during this sultry Summer season in Washington. Nothing particularly new has happened in Mexico—the Correll case only parallels the hundreds of murders and rapes of Americans that have been going on for six years, and even those hardy sufferers, the oil companies, have not had much of anything new happen to them. The El Paso incident in May was a spectacular and most efficient piece of police work, destined to improve the border situation—as it has—but nothing more. Yet here we have a Congressional investigation and thrilling speeches about "Old Glory" on the floor of the House of Representatives, Congress discusses new arms embargoes, and the Spanish newspapers along the border are getting held up in the mails because they discuss the ethical issue of whether the exiled Mexicans in this country should or should not return to Mexico and fight the Americans "when intervention comes."

I have spent the better part of the last two weeks in trying to discover the immediate causes back of the movement which is going on with an unmistakable tendency toward intervention. I find that the usually active groups of expert dopesters on the Mexican situation are very nearly as much in the dark as are the thoughtful men.

Mexico a Chaos.

There is, however, one outstanding feature and that is Mexico herself. Conditions there are serious beyond the description of mere words. Economically, socially, and politically, the country is in chaos—the Congressional investigation is bringing that out. Carranza may or may not be getting a better grip on the situation, but if he is there is as yet no visible sign. Here, then, are causes enough for the serious study and consideration of Mexico—but these causes have been there for nearly six years. The question in men's minds is why it is coming up now. There are three reasons, or possible reasons.

The first of these has to do with our own international relations. Under the Monroe Doctrine we stand as sponsors for the lesser nations of this hemisphere. English and French capital and citizens have suffered at the hands of Mexicans in degrees only less than ourselves. It is said (and all the evidence bears out the contention) that the Bryan notes of 1912 and 1914 gave those nations to understand that they must and might look to the United States to protect their nationals in Mexico and to secure the reparation due for the destruction of the property representing European investments. It is believed that it was upon these representations and out of respect for the Monroe Doctrine, thus reiterated, that England refrained from taking action in 1913, when the depredations of Carranza forces (not bandits) caused millions of pounds of losses to British investors and the death of many British subjects, including the notorious case of Thomas Benton. Benton was slain by Villistas, at a time, I believe, when Villa was a recognized arm of the Carranza government.

When the great war was won there was serious talk of the pressure which Europe might bring to bear on the United States to clean up Mexico. This talk was stilled, however, with the assertion that part of the reward of the United States for its share in the war would be a "free hand" as far as Mexico was concerned. But the as yet unwritten history of the organization of the League of Nations may some day show us that even though the Monroe Doctrine was not thrown into the balance, we gave certain pledges regarding Mexico which must soon be redeemed.

It must be remembered that England has not yet recognized Carranza's Government, and that France's tardy acceptance was none too generous. There are also the recent acquirement by the British Government of a control of one of the great oil companies operating in Mexico and the business rumors of a yet larger consolidation of the great oil producers under a European corporation, probably largely British. Pressure from Europe may indeed be a factor in our sudden interest in Mexico.

The President's Hand.

The second possible reason for our discussion of the subject now is domestic. It is said in inner circles in Washington that it was President Wilson himself who made the decision that kept Mexico out of the League of Nations—along with Costa Rica. The story goes that, as in so many important matters, President Wilson was allowed to make the decisions when all the facts had been presented to him. This would indicate a decided change in his personal policy. Moreover, with the great war over, we may not be considered so great in turning our attention to Mexico, as a man who has been cured of pneumonia will not be criticised for attending to the boil which has been bothering him even through the greater crisis. Our Mexican commentators put much emphasis also on the political side of our attitude toward the Mexican question. They are intensely interested in studying the Republicans in the ranks against the Wilson policy of noninterference. They like to say our interest in Mexico is anti-Wilson rather than anti-Carranza. This phase is worth a moment's thought, at least.

The third possible reason for the Mexican discussion is that we may have been jockeyed into it by propaganda. We have had so much propaganda, and the art has reached such perfection, that we are likely to see the "fine Italian hand" of the healthy American press agent in almost anything that happens to be.

The Mexican situation is, in fact, not free from propaganda. I find four distinct lines having bearing on it. First are the activities of American interests in Mexico against Carranza. They contend that conditions in Mexico are not known, and that if the truth is only presented the American people will right the situation in the best way, whatever that may be. Second is the pro-Carranza propaganda, which asserts that "American" interests" are grossly misstating the Mexican situation and that Carranza is rapidly bringing peace and prosperity back to his country. Third, are the anti-Carranza Mexicans, who agree with the Americans that things in Mexico are hopeless under Carranza, and wish to be allowed to fight them. Fourth, are the pacifists and radicals who say that Mexico must be allowed to work out her own family quarrels, and especially at this time, when, they hold, she is enjoying a socialistic Government and should be allowed to solve its problems.

THE FOUR KINDS OF MEXICAN PROPAGANDA WHICH ARE ASSAILING AMERICAN PUBLIC OPINION.

"First is the activity of the American 'interests' in Mexico against the Carranza Government. They contend that conditions in Mexico are not known, and that if only the truth is presented the American people will right the situation in the best way, whatever that may be.

"Second is Carranza's own propaganda, which asserts that the American 'interests' are grossly exaggerating the Mexican situation and that Carranza is rapidly bringing peace and prosperity back to his country.

"Third are the anti-Carranza Mexicans, who agree with the Americans that things are hopeless in Mexico under Carranza, and wish to be allowed to right them—with Uncle Sam approving.

"Fourth are the pacifists and radicals, who say that Mexico must be allowed to work out her own family quarrels, and, especially at this time when, they hold, she is enjoying a socialistic government and should be allowed to solve its problems."

Some of the Propagandists.

Leading the American propaganda we must consider the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, with offices at 347 Fifth Avenue, an organization about six months old and now prominently in the public eye through its connection with the Correll case. The National Association brought Mrs. John W. Correll and her son all the way from Tampico, Mexico, to Washington; to testify in person to the murder of her husband and her own rape at the hands of Mexican bandits. From a publicity viewpoint the matter was splendidly handled—almost too well handled. The National Association has perfectly logical grounds for its activities, however, in its avowed purposes of protecting American rights. This is the first time a personal case has occurred since its organization, and the association has, as the phrase goes, "gone to the mat" to bring the matter to the attention of Washington, just as it has been bringing all sorts of financial losses to Washington's attention for its members during the past six months. The facts in the Correll case have not been distorted, but they have been presented, have been kept on the front pages of the newspapers for one solid week, and have been followed by a Congressional investigation and a new embargo on arms bought for Mexico.

C. H. Boynton, director of the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, was formerly of The Associated Press and latterly of the Russian Information Bureau, (before the Russian revolution.) He holds (and I know that the men back of his organization state the same thing) that its only desire is the accurate presentation of facts, and that the facts themselves will plead more eloquently than any propaganda or the distortion of any single fact. The association has been issuing press matter in the usual mimeographed form, and gets out a semi-monthly bulletin of magazine size, with eight or more pages of recent information about Mexico.

Mexico Is the Matter.

The attitude of the organization is decidedly anti-Carranza, but this, I am told, is not alone because of what Carranza may have done to the members, but for what he has not done, for the failure of government in Mexico is quite as serious as the offenses of the Government. Mr. Boynton has stated his position as that "what is the matter with Mexico is not Carranza or any other individual, but Mexico herself." I doubt whether any man who, knowing Mexico, looks upon her today, hankrupt and stripped of all but a handful of her able men of business or politics, will disagree with this idea.

The National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico has over 1,000 individual members and well over 100 corporation members. Among the latter are included all the big interests, excepting those of mining. Carranza still holds pending the provisions of his new constitution relating to the ownership of mining properties. I have been assured personally, however, by the greatest mining interests in Mexico that they are in sympathy with the organization.

The chief support of the National Association comes, I am assured by the Carranza agents here, from the oil interests, whose own organization, the Mexican Oil Producers' Association, antedates the National Association by about a year. It was the oil organization which long ago arrived at the decision that Carranza's régime was in no sense either permanent or truly reflecting the sentiment of the Mexican people. As a result of this decision, and not because of any high moral sense, (the presence or absence of which would constitute no argument,) the oil men have not financed any anti-Carranza revolution, nor have they carried on any propaganda for intervention as such. They reached the decision long ago, I am assured, that the only thing wanted was that the American people should know not only what has happened to Americans in Mexico, but what has happened to Mexico herself. Last Tuesday I talked with Dr. Alfredo Caturegli, the Mexican Financial Agent here, in his offices at 120 Broadway, and he was unable to give me even specific accusations as to activities of the oil men or the National Association in the matter of intervention. In fact, his idea seemed to be that the present agitation about Mexico was probably Republican politics.

But I have no desire to give the oil men an absolutely clear bill of health on the matter of propaganda. I believe myself to be one of the few Americans who have lived long in Mexico who do not believe that intervention is the only cure—and the oil men are all Americans who have lived long in Mexico. This probable conviction of theirs has had rather more influence on the employes of their two organizations who have not known Mexico than it should justly have, and these employes have not always limited themselves in their zeal to give their employers, what they seemed to want. But I believe that the oil men, as a whole, (and other American business men with them,) are perfectly willing to leave the issue to the American people, if the facts are really understood.

The oil people have made several more or less aporadic efforts to get the facts they wanted known before the American public. They have got out a number of handsome booklets with documentary evidence; they have talked at banquets and to newspaper reporters; one of them, with a pen as trenchant in its way as Tom Lawson's, has written innumerable lively letters to the newspapers; they have now and then had a hand in various matter printed in books, magazines and newspapers. What their opponents call "the text book of intervention," the very interesting (and to me very sound,) "Mexico Under Carranza" of Thomas E. Gibbon, was inspired, I am told, by them, though published independently by Doubleday, Page & Co.—proof enough of its genuineness as a bona fide work.

The oil people urge some writers to go to Mexico—the material of one is being used by one of the newspaper syndicates; but this writer, I am sure, has never been asked even to discuss his copy—the oil men depended on the facts to convince him. Another, who had been to Mexico on his own affairs, talked over an arrangement by which he was to devote his time to Mexican articles—most unprofitable writing, as no one was then interested—but the matter fell through owing to the organization of the National Association, which has worked more directly. All this "smells of oil," as the Carranzistas point out, but it is interesting to note that since Washington's interest in Mexico opened the pages of the newspapers to Mexican material I have been unable to find that any effort has been or is being made to color the material published. The National Association gives out statements and helps reporters dig out facts and history, which is all most excellent and skilled publicity, but is, perhaps, not propaganda.

In talking to me, Dr. Caturegli, the Mexican financial agent, who also heads the "Mexican Information Bureau," made no direct charges except against Edward L. Doheny, head of the Mexican Petroleum Company, and Dr. William Gates, who testified recently before the Congressional investigation. Regarding the latter, no facts could be given, and as a result of thorough investigation I am convinced that Dr. Gates, who is an archaeologist of standing, had no relationship with any American "interests" when he wrote his series of articles on "The Four Governments of Mexico," which appeared in The World's Work from February to June, 1919, and that the testimony he gave before the Congressional committee was given solely in the interests of what he believed to be the truth after what is probably the most thorough study of Mexico under revolutionary conditions ever made by any one man, Mexican or foreigner.

Dr. Caturegli's accusation against Mr. Doheny is that he went to Europe last Winter to oppose any recognition of Carranza at the Peace Conference. Mr. Doheny, who is the pioneer exploiter of the Mexican oil fields, (as well as those of California,) may or may not have gone to Europe to oppose Carranza. Since his recent return Under Secretary of State Frank L. Polk has issued a statement retracting the charges originally made that Mr. Doheny's trip abroad was in any way connected with a desire to influence our international policy. He undoubtedly did talk with members of the Peace Conference, but our State Department now says he was without ulterior motive. It is said by the Mexicans that Mr. Doheny has asserted that he "would give $10,000,000 to see Carranza ousted," but it is much surer that he never gave anybody $10,000,000 for that purpose. The largest sum of money he has spent in the mass is $100,000, which was expended in a vain attempt to get together the basic historical data on the background of Mexico's troubles. The question which the scholars who worked on the Doheny Commission had presented to them was "What Is the Matter with Mexico as a Self-Governing Community?" and the end in view was to find a way (perhaps patterned on Hampton Institute) for expending perhaps a hundred of the Doheny millions on an educational system in Mexico for raising up patriotic Mexican community leaders. It was not through any fault of Mr. Doheny that this survey failed. I give it as an indication of the kind of "propaganda" in this man's mind.

Work of Mexican Exiles.

The other possible propaganda system operating against Carranza in this country is that of the Mexican exiles. They, as I have stated, want a chance to do the curing of Mexico's troubles by their own special remedies. They do not support intervention, but they do seek American opinion, because they believe that only with the support of the United States can any Government in Mexico be set up or endure. El Universal, an independent daily newspaper of Mexico City, published an article on the subject on May 20, 1919, dividing the propaganda in the United States into three classes, all political divisions. First is mentioned that of the Villistas, (followers of Francisco Villa and General Felipe Angeles,) who have a "Mexican General Alliance" in New York, with branches in other American cities, and a newspaper, La Patria, which appears daily in Spanish in El Paso. The Felicistas, followers of Felix Diaz and made up of most of the old Diaz group of "reactionaries" or "anti-revolutionists," are said to have organizations in this country "with the ostensible object of uniting all Mexican factions," and also have a paper in El Paso, La Republica. The Vasquistas, or followers of Emilio Vasquez Gomez, are the remains of the old Madero crowd who did not go over to Carranza or Villa. They have no large organization or newspaper. The most important anti-Carranza movement among the Mexicans, however, is that headed by Francisco Leon de la Barra, former Ambassador to Washington, for three months Provisional President of Mexico, and leader of the Church party in Mexican politics. He is a man of European culture, of considerable force, and a genuine rallying point. He was in Paris during the Peace Conference and wielded far more influence, probably, than either Mr. Doheny or the Carranza delegate, Alberto Pani. In fact, El Universal predicted when Mr. Pani departed on his ill-starred mission that "his first problem will be to overcome de la Barra's influence," which, lacking the latter's skill, standing, and calibre, Mr. Pani could not do, the paper thought.

Pro-Carranza Propaganda.

The pro-Carranza propaganda directed toward the American people is one of the most interesting and skillful bits of work ever done in this fascinating business. For three years it has been working at highest efficiency in a field in which it was all alone, for, owing to the exigencies of the war and the specific request of the State Department to Washington correspondents (and where necessary to editors) to "leave Mexico alone," little anti-Carranza information ever leaked out. The whole field was open, and even if anti-Carranza propaganda these last three years had been bought, most American newspapers would have avoided it. In other words, whatever has been done, however we may interpret the activities of the oil people and the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico, the physical fact remains that the most they can do is to oppose the Carranza propaganda and the grip which it has had on the American press and public. I, for one, can believe that they were sincere in saying that they wanted only that the truth be known.

I need hardly say that during my official connection with our Government I saw much of the Carranza propaganda first hand and learned much more second hand from sources which were beyond question. What I want to set down here, however, is, as briefly as I can, the basic principles of the system which Carranza established and carried through and still maintains in this country and in Mexico.

In the first place, for four years a digest of the editorial complexion of the American press concerning Mexico has been made in the Washington Embassy and telegraphed nightly to Carranza in Mexico City, almost invariably in code.

A Mexican news bureau was maintained in Washington through almost the entire European war, its chief organ being The Mexican Review, published in English and in Spanish, (it is now issued in Mexico City, the two editions being combined.) This monthly was edited by George Weeks, an American about 60 years old, long resident in Mexico. It contained pages of favorable articles, the usual line of trade news, picturesque bits of the country, articles setting forth its undoubted charms, &c. No bit of unfavorable news crept in and occasion was always taken to refute any important accusation against Carranza and to take a hand in any timely development. Mr. Weeks was later with our Committee on Public Information in Mexico City.

Many bureau correspondents and publicity agents have become identified with Carranza without any consciousness of their part in advancing the First Chief's publicity plan. Typical of writers who have gone to Mexico and been well received, obtained the material the Government wanted printed and returned without a chance to study actual conditions, is a correspondent recently returned. He confined his writing to descriptions of Mexico's need for development, and for machinery and other commodities, but without a discussion of the present situation in its relation to those needs. He was, I am informed, escorted by Carranza aids and had every facility for getting what Carranza wanted him to get. His work was sincerely done, and is an example of the most insidious of the Carranza propaganda policies, which is directed toward letting the newcomer see only what it is desirable for him to see—a trick learned from Diaz, as I shall show in a moment.

William Bayard Hale has been sadly grilled in the Congressional investigation and has protested in print regarding it. He went to Mexico as representative of President Wilson and returned a strong supporter of Carranza, his alleged subsequent connection with German propaganda in this country discounting his reports at a late day.

Lincoln Steffens, who is also said to have been sent to Mexico as he was sent to Russia, to report on conditions for persons in authority, is said to have himself written the radical clauses of the Mexican constitution, the chief bone of contention between Carranza and the American investors.

Propaganda by Junket.

An interesting form of propaganda which Carranza borrowed from Diaz is the junket. A number of these private car and special train parties were taken into Mexico this Spring, the first being that of the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce, in April, I believe. In the old days General Diaz's Government used to finance these expeditions in whole or in part, and although Mexico was then in far better show form than now, they were always carefully routed, the same round of entertainments given, the same charming young Mexican officials and officers assigned as personal escorts, and the same speeches made by the grizzled old warrior President.

This year the same system is being followed, with similar success. I was interested and amused, shortly after my return from Mexico this Spring, to talk with a Methodist bishop who had recently made a trip to Mexico, and to hear his comments on conditions of peace and progress. He had seen no bandits, so there were none—yet the dates of his trip coincided with two of the most open and daringly contemptuous attacks, one on a great British mining railway and one on a ranch owned by an aged American, and both within hearing, almost, of the railway line down which the bishop had ridden in such assurance of safety and comfort. It is easy (as the conflicting reports from Russia indicate so clearly) for the most intelligent observer to get only the impression his hosts wish to give him in visiting even a war-sacked land of whose language he is ignorant and whose history and previous conditions he does not know.

The most effective form of propaganda for Carranza has come over the telegraph wires from Mexico itself. This was achieved by a combination of censorship and the provisions of Article 33, by which the President can expel, at will, any "undesirable" foreigner, without any legal process whatever. The dispatches of all American correspondents have to be submitted to the censor—have been for four years. The correspondent never sees his telegram after it is censored and does not even know how or whether it was sent. If, however, he even submits dispatches of questionable loyalty to the Mexican Government, he is called on the carpet and must listen to a full "explanation" which he must usually send without knowing whether his original dispatch was ever transmitted.

The control thus rapidly becomes psychological, and nothing is submitted that is not absolutely sure, for the correspondent knows that only matter favoring Carranza goes and that he gets into trouble if he even tries to get anything else through. He is therefore made into a Carranza propagandist whether he will or no. If he tries to protect his paper by mail he is up against possible opening of letters—Carranza during the American censorship, at least, is said to have maintained steaming plants at Mexico City and Laredo. Even if the correspondent sends by messenger, and his paper is protected, he gets into trouble again. The correspondent is held personally responsible for whatever his paper publishes, no matter whether it bears a Mexico date, a Washington date, or is written as a local story—if there is any chance whatever that he sent it out or could have known the facts contained in it.

The result is that the correspondents to this day, if they are square with their papers, are sitting tight, waiting for the "big story" that will be worth their being sent out of the country under Article 33. During Carranza's first days in Mexico City the correspondent of one of the great press associations was instructed to "sit tight" and behave himself, as the organization "could not afford to keep sending new men down to Mexico every week."

All this tended to influence all of the newspapers of the United States. Nothing unfavorable ever came out of Mexico, so why should credence be given these howlers in the United States? It became increasingly easy for pro-Carranza statements to get printed, and harder and harder for anything opposed to Carranza.

Carranza has spent considerable sums of money in this country recently in paid advertisements. Some of these advertisements have been answered in kind the next day or the next week. There has also been some motion picture propaganda, the only motion pictures of Mexico in existence being a series more or less favorable to Carranza and containing one reel, at least, of pure propaganda lauding Carranza personally. There is no charge that money was paid directly or indirectly for these pictures, but the producer, in order to get them at all, had to be very close to the Carranza authorities. Pictures taken recently by one of the Chambers of Commerce visiting Mexico (that of Minneapolis, I believe) were confiscated at the border and destroyed.

Pacifists and Radicals.

The fourth form of propaganda is that of the pacifists and radicals, just now comparatively quiet as far as surface indications go, but of true potentiality for the future. They base their protests against our interfering in Mexico largely on President Wilson's utterances of three years ago, when he held that the troubles in Mexico were domestic problems, and that we had no right to interfere in a family quarrel. The trial of Henry Ford's $1,000,000 libel suit against The Chicago Tribune is bringing much of this to light now, and the movement undoubtedly has its decided strength in the minds of many Americans.

Aiding the pacifists is the radical element, of some numerical strength. The Liberator has been running articles by John Kenneth Turner for many months, and Mr. Turner knows most of the seamy sides of Mexico, though perhaps correspondingly little of the upper side. A series in The Nation may be classed with the radical propaganda, and the author is now active, with others, in the organization of an association opposed to intervention in Mexico which is to take form next week, I am told.

The radicals in this country and abroad are deeply interested in Mexico, for they believe that many of the problems of modern socialism are being worked out there. I was asked not long ago if I believed that the Mexican trouble was a part of "the" revolution. Mexico is certainly making a trial of certain forms of what is loosely called "Bolshevism." She is failing with them as a Government policy, but I am not sure that she is not going to be considerably more Bolshevist than will be comfortable—and that in a distinctly measurable time—if something does not change the present trend of affairs there. But that is another story, save that it should be mentioned here in connection with a possible very active opposition through the great radical channels of propaganda if intervention becomes really imminent.

So the wheel spins on and the propaganda rolls out, while we call it one name and the chap we talk about calls it by another. As I go up and down among those who talk and live the Mexican situation I find few who search with any great diligence for the essential truth that lies below the facts and the propaganda, but I have tried here to give the picture of the propaganda situation as it is. I know that I shall seem to have presented the case rather against Carranza's henchmen of the pen, but this is because they have held the field so long and have filled it with such efficiency. For three years they have filled it, and today we are watching the waking of the opposition, freed from the restrictions of wartime expediency, busily marshaling in turn the facts they would have us know, and which we have lost sight of for so long.

OUR WAR EFFORT IN FIGURES

What Uncle Sam Did to Help Whip Germany Reduced to Statistics for Rapid Reference

IN accordance with instructions from the Secretary of War, Colonel Leonard P. Ayres, chief of the statistics branch of the department, has prepared a 150-page book dealing with the larger steps in the military preparations and action of the United States in the world war. A condensation of some of the facts presented therein follows:

The number of men serving in the armed forces of the nation during the war was 4,800,000, of whom 4,000,000 served in the army.

The United States raised twice as many men as did the Northern States in the civil war, but only half as many in proportion to the population.

The British sent more men to France in their first year of war than we did in our first year, but it took England three years to reach a strength of 2,000,000 men in France, and the United States accomplished it in half of that time.

Of every 100 men who served, 10 were National Guardsmen, 13 were Regulars, and 77 were in the National Army, (or would have been if the services had not been consolidated.)

Of the 54,000,000 males in the population, 26,000,000 were registered in the draft or were already in service.

Country Boys Best.

In the physical examinations the States of the Middle West made the best showing. Country boys did better than city boys; whites better than colored, and native born better than foreign born.

In this war twice as many men were recruited as in the civil war, and at one-twentieth of the recruiting cost.

There were 200,000 army officers. Of every six officers, one had previous military training with troops, three were graduates of officers' training camps, and two came directly from civil life.

The average American soldier who fought in France had six months of training here, two months overseas before entering the line, and one month in a quiet sector before going into battle.

Most soldiers received their training in infantry divisions, which are our typical combat units and consist of about 1,000 officers and 27,000 men.

Forty-two divisions were sent to France.

More than two-thirds of our line officers were graduates of the officers' training camps.

France and England sent to the United States nearly 800 officers who gave aid as instructors.

Transporting Troops.

During our nineteen months of war more than 2,000,000 American soldiers were carried to France. Half a million of these went over in the first thirteen months, the others in the last six months.

The highest troop-carrying records are those of July, 1918, when 306,000 soldiers were carried to Europe, and May, 1919, when 330,000 were brought home to America.

Most of the troops who sailed for France left from New York. Half of them landed in England and the other half landed in France.

Among every 100 Americans who went over forty-nine went in British ships, forty-five in American ships, three in Italian, two in French, and one in Russian shipping under English control.

Our cargo ships averaged one complete trip every seventy days and our troopships one complete trip every thirty-five days.

The cargo fleet was almost exclusively American. It reached the size of 2,600,000 deadweight tons and carried to Europe about 7,500,000 tons of cargo.

The greatest troopship among all the ships has been the Leviathan, which landed 12,000 men (the equivalent of a German division) in France every month.

The fastest transports have been the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific, which have made complete turnarounds, taken on new troops and started back again in nineteen days.

Problems of Purchase.

The problems of feeding and clothing the army were difficult because of the immense quantities involved rather than because of the difficulty of manufacturing.

Requirements for some kinds of clothing for the army were more than twice as great as the pre-war total American production of the same articles.

To procure the articles needed for the army the Government commandeered all wool and some other staple articles in the United States and controlled production through all its stages.

American engineers built in France 83 new ship berths, 1,000 miles of standard-gauge track, and 538 miles of narrow-gauge track.

The Signal Corps strung in France 100,000 miles of telephone and telegraph wire.

Prior to the armistice 40,000 trucks were shipped to the forces in France.

Construction projects in the United States cost twice as much as the Panama Canal, and construction overseas was on nearly as large a scale.

Rifles and Machine Guns.

When war was declared the army had on hand nearly 600,000 Springfield rifles. Their manufacture was continued, and the American Enfield rifle designed and put into production.

The total production of Springfield and Enfield rifles up to the signing of the armistice was more than 2,500,000.

The use of machine guns on a large scale is a development of the European war. In the American Army the allowance in 1912 was four machine guns per regiment. In 1919 the new army plans provide for an equipment of 336 guns per regiment, or eighty-four times as many.

The entire number of American machine guns produced to the end of 1918 was 227,000.

American production of rifle ammunition amounted to approximately 3,500,000,000 rounds, of which 1,500,000,000 were shipped overseas.

Artillery.

When war was declared the United States had sufficient light artillery to equip an army of 500,000 men, and shortly found itself confronted with the problem of preparing to equip 5,000,000 men.

To meet the situation it was decided in June, 1917, to allot our guns to training purposes and to equip our forces in France with artillery conforming to the French and British standard calibres.

Up to the end of April, 1919, the number of complete artillery units produced in American plans was more than 3,000, or equal to all those purchased from the French and British during the war.

The number of rounds of complete artillery ammunition produced in American plants was in excess of 20,000,000, as compared with 9,000,000 rounds secured from the French and British.

So far as the Allies were concerned, the European war was in large measure fought with American powder and high explosives.

During the war America produced 19,000 tons of poison gas, much of which was sold to the French and British.

Out of every hundred days that our combat divisions were in line in France they were supported by their own artillery for seventy-five days, by British artillery for five days, and by French for one and one-half days. Of the remaining eighteen and one-half days that they were in line without artillery, eighteen days were in quiet sectors, and only one-half of one day in each hundred was in active sectors.

In round numbers, we had in France 3,000 pieces of artillery, of which nearly 500 were made in America, and we used in the firing line 2,250 pieces, of which over 100 were made in America.

Airplanes, Motors, Balloons.

On the declaration of war the United States had fifty-five training airplanes, of which fifty-one were classified as obsolete and the other four as obsolescent.

When we entered the war the Allies made the designs of their planes available to us and before the end of hostilities furnished us from their own manufacture 3,800 service planes.

Aviation training schools in the United States graduated 8,602 men from elementary courses and 4,028 from advanced courses. More than 5,000 pilots and observers were sent overseas.

The total personnel of the Air Service officers, students, and enlisted men, increased from 1,200 at the outbreak of the war to nearly 200,000 at its close.

There were produced in the United States to Nov. 30, 1918, more than 8,000 training planes and more than 16,000 training engines.

The De Havilland-4 observation and day bombing plane was the only plane the United States put into quantity production. Before the signing of the armistice 3,227 had been completed and 1,885 shipped overseas. The plane was successfully used at the front for three months.

The production of the 12-cylinder Liberty engine was America's chief contribution to aviation. Before the armistice 13,574 had been completed, 4,435 shipped to the expeditionary forces, and 1,025 delivered to the Allies.

The first fliers in action wearing the American uniform were members of the Lafayette Escadrille, who were transferred to the American service in December, 1917.

The American air force at the front grew from 3 squadrons in April to 45 in November, 1918. On Nov. 11 the 45 squadrons had an equipment of 740 planes.

Of 2,698 planes sent to the zone of the advance for American aviators 667, or nearly one-fourth, were of American manufacture.

American air squadrons played important rôles in the battles of Château-Thierry, St. Mihiel, and the Meuse-Argonne. They brought down in combat 755 enemy planes, while their own losses of planes numbered only 357.

Men in Battle.

Two out of every three American soldiers who reached France took part in battle. The number who reached France was 2,084,000, and of these 1,390,000 saw active service at the front.

Of the forty-two divisions that reached France twenty-nine took part in active combat service. Seven of them were regular army divisions, eleven were organized from the National Guard, and eleven were made up of National Army troops.

American divisions were in battle for 200 days and engaged in thirteen major operations.

From the middle of August until the end of the war the American divisions held during the greater part of the time a front longer than that held by the British.

In October the American divisions held 101 miles of line, or 23 per cent. of the entire western front.

On April 1 the Germans had a superiority of 324,000 in rifle strength. Due to American arrivals the allied strength exceeded that of the Germans in June and was more than 600,000 above it in November.

In the battle of St. Mihiel 550,000 Americans were engaged, as compared with about 100,000 on the Northern side in the battle of Gettysburg. The artillery fired more than 1,000,000 shells in four hours, which is the most intense concentration of artillery fire recorded in history.

The Meuse-Argonne battle lasted for forty-seven days, during which 1,200,000 American troops were engaged.

The American battle losses in the war were 50,000 killed and 236,000 wounded.

Health and Casualties.

Of every 100 American soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Germany two were killed or died of disease during the period of hostilities.

The total battle deaths of all nations in this war were greater than all the deaths in all the wars in the previous 100 years.

Russian battle deaths were thirty-four times as heavy as those of the United States, those of Germany thirty-two times as great, the French twenty-eight times and the British eighteen times as large.

The number of American lives lost was 122,500, of which about 10,000 were in the navy, and the rest in the army and the marines attached to it.

In the American Army the casualty rate in the infantry was higher than in any other service, and that for officers was higher than for men.

For every man killed in battle seven were wounded.

Five out of every six men sent to hospitals on account of wounds were cured and returned to duty.

In the expeditionary forces battle losses were twice as large as deaths from disease.

In this war the death rate from disease was lower, and the death rate from battle was higher than in any other previous American war.

Pneumonia killed more soldiers than were killed in battle. Meningitis was the next most serious disease.

The total direct war costs amounted to $186,000,000,000, and of this sum the enemy countries spent about one-third and those on the allied side about two-thirds. Germany spent more than any other nation, and was closely followed by Great Britain, whose expenditures include those of her colonies.

Cost to the United States.

The war cost the United States considerably more than $1,000,000 an hour for over two years.

The direct cost was about $22,000,000,000, or nearly enough to pay the entire cost of running the United States Government from 1791 up to the outbreak of the European war.

Our expenditure in this war was sufficient to have carried on the Revolutionary War continuously for more than 1,000 years at the rate of expenditure which that war actually involved.

In addition to this huge expenditure nearly $10,000,000,000 has been loaned by the United States to the Allies.

The army expenditures have been over $14,000,000,000, or nearly two-thirds of our total war costs.

During the first three months our war expenditures were at the rate of $2,000,000 per day. During the next year they averaged more than $22,000,000 a day. For the final ten months of the period, from April, 1917, to April, 1919, the daily average was over $44,000,000.

Although the army expenditures are less than two-thirds of our total war costs, they are nearly equal to the value of all the gold produced in the whole world after the discovery of America.

The pay of the army during the war cost more than the combined salaries of all the public school principals and teachers in the United States for the five years from 1912 to 1916.

The United States spent about one-eighth of the entire cost of the war, and something less than one-fifth of the expenditures of the allied side.

Be Careful What You Wash Your Hair With

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

The Logical Consequence of Satisfactory Service

We have said that nothing in the history of the tire industry approaches the intensity of favor in which Goodyear Tires today are everywhere held.

In support of this assertion we have only to cite the present situation, in the light of the enormous production our factories are delivering.

Last week, for example, our Akron plants alone averaged the immense figure of 26,230 finished Goodyear Tires per day, while the daily output of our Canadian factory was well beyond 2,000.

Even this amazing total is so plainly insufficient to meet all demands that we are now at work on a plant in Los Angeles which will afford an additional daily capacity of several thousand.

It can scarcely be deemed peculiar, in view of the remarkable performance of Goodyear Tires, that public preference for them should be so pronounced.

The leadership they enjoy is no more than the logical consequence of the fine and faithful service Goodyear Tires have year after year given users.

Purely by virtue of such service, and without the aid of fictitious discounts, delusive guarantees or like expedients of any sort, has the present unparalleled demand for Goodyear Tires been aroused.

Certainly a product must embody a conspicuous dimension of value thus to win the allegiance of the largest single group of tire-buyers in the world.

We are constantly striving to expand our present production, in an endeavor to establish ample stocks of Goodyear Tires everywhere.

Until this is accomplished we suggest that you anticipate future requirements by placing a reservation order with your nearest Goodyear Service Station Dealer.

We also suggest that you let this Dealer show you how to care properly for the Goodyear Tires you now have, as a means of assuring you their maximum usefulness.

Your return from such care will be not only increased satisfaction, but a very material profit in added mileage.

COMMERCIAL AVIATION RESTS ON FEDERAL AID

America in Danger of Losing Her Rightful Place in Aerial Development—Activity in Foreign Countries

By MOIS H. AVRAM, M. E.,
President Aeronautical Society of America.

It needs not an expansive imagination to appreciate the importance of aviation in the future. Once placed on a stable footing and adapted to commercial uses, it will be the greatest force for progress in the history of the world. In this regard, then, is it too early to assume that the day is not far distant when aerial transportation between Europe and America, and to all parts of the world, will have become an accomplished fact? That being the case, is it not obvious that the nation furthest advanced in the development and production of commercial aircraft will dominate all others in the air as England has in the past dominated the seas and attracted to herself, by virtue of her supremacy, the great bulk of the world trade?

The greatest question of nations today is markets, and as a consequence the world is facing the greatest epoch of international intercourse in its history. Individuals and Governments are reaching out for new connections. Old methods and practices are being abandoned and new ones established. Markets are being sought, trade routes built up. It will be only a question of time before America, today secure in its possession of leadership, and for the moment in control of the world's supplies, will be called upon to meet the keenest sort of competition.

Aircraft developed to a point where it can be successfully adapted to commercial uses will prove a potent weapon for winning and holding foreign trade. Markets will be brought closer to their sources of supply, deliveries can be quickly and successfully made, and adjustments can be accomplished easily and with the least delay. To the nation, then, furthest advanced in aerial commerce will go the bulk of the world commerce. Hence, in the interests of their own national economic development aviation, is today a question of nations and not individuals.

The day is past when it can be considered the legitimate business of comparatively few and cannot with safety be left wholly in their hands for development. Not that individuals are unwilling, but unsupported by official recognition of their efforts and active co-operation where necessary, they cannot hope to compete with the large corporations and other interests in competing nations which are organized and encouraged by Government supervision and Government aid. Interest, therefore, must wane unless otherwise stimulated.

Popular interest seems to be centered solely in the spectacular accomplishments. This lack of enthusiasm seems to have penetrated even to the halls of Congress, where an attempt to pass a bill carrying a few millions for aircraft development met with as much resistance as is found in a small boy about to have a tooth pulled. Despite the examples being set daily by European countries, such as England, France and Italy, all of which have entered upon a well-defined policy of aircraft development, it would seem that the industry in this country was to totter to ultimate decline unsupported save by a baker's dozen of enthusiasts.

Australia is planning an air service between her respective States. Brazil has authorized a credit of $500,000 for the same purpose. Under a Brazilian Government decree private interests are to establish an aerial passenger service without privilege of monopoly for the transport of passengers and mail.

China is negotiating with English manufacturers for the purchase of a large number of airplanes. Colombia, in the heart of the Andes, is making preparations for an aerial mail service, while Denmark has a bill introduced which will give to the State monopoly of the nation's aerial resources.

Even in Holland arrangements have been made for a specific program of aerial development, not the least of which is an aerial exhibition for the purpose of stimulating interest. In Italy the Rome-Naples air service has begun. Japan has purchased fifty machines from Great Britain with the object of putting them to commercial use. Spain is starting an aerial mail service. And Germany would have begun on Aug. 1 a Hamburg-American freight service between that country and the United States but for the interposition of the United States Government.

With the exception of the postal air routes, and the small appropriation which has been made for the development of the air service of the Army and Navy, no constructive program for arousing public interest, or stimulating aviation as an industry, has been undertaken, to say nothing of failure to encourage individuals to incorporate for the manufacture and development of the airplane in the United States for commercial uses.

England has always been exceedingly practical where her own national benefit and welfare have been concerned. In Great Britain the industry is being forced forward not by the manufacturer but by the Government. Without waiting for the manufacturers to act, the Air Ministry has gone forward with a speed which has forced the individuals to hustle if they would keep up. Public interest has been stimulated by the adoption of definite civic air programs. As a result aviation is rapidly approaching a stage where it might well be termed practically solved. So far has it progressed that insurance companies have taken it up seriously, with a view to insuring against risks involved both to individuals and machines.

The most urgent need for the present is the mapping of the country for air routes and the establishment of adequate landing fields in strategic centres. This should be undertaken by the Government without delay. The next move would be to parcel these routes out to competent bidders who would undertake the development of trade and passenger services. It would further be understood that such bidders would be obligated to maintain such service for a stipulated period of time, and by awarding the mail-carrying privileges to the companies maintaining these lines such lines would at once be placed on a practical business basis and much of the speculation regarding their immediate commercial success would be eliminated.

By appropriating to itself the nation's aerial routes, and disposing of them to bidders without charge, except on proof that such bidders were earnest and no speculators intent upon reselling the charters, the Government would have done much for the development of commercial aviation by inspiring public interest in aviation as a commercial project. Such a departure would be met at once with enthusiasm by the cities along the routes of such aerial lines and they would gladly co-operate with the Government in establishing adequate landing fields under standard specifications for size, kind and facilities, together with signals and posts to safeguard aviators and their machines in making landings at all hours of the day and night.

Landing fields are one of the greatest shortcomings in this country. We have no adequate facilities for accommodating machines of large size with but one or two exceptions.

With the Government and cities following such a plan as suggested, aviation would receive an impetus which would soon find its effect in public approval and usefulness. The time to begin is at once. The nation, in fact, the world, is at the peak of enthusiasm as a result of the achievements of aviation as an instrument of war, and the imposing events which have elapsed in the last few weeks.

To carry out the program suggested but a small appropriation would be necessitated by the Government to make it effective. The burden of commercial development would be imposed on the public where, in the last analysis, it rightfully belongs. It needs but Government initiative and action, and a comprehensive and intelligent plan, to bring it to full fruition.

CARE OF TIRES.

Helpful Points to Increase Mileage and Lessen Expense.

Careful motorists who seek the most economical operation of their cars may get some pointers for increasing their tire mileage, and incidentally reducing the expense in this important and often costly element in motoring, from the following suggestions put out by one of the large rubber companies in the manufacturing city of Akron, Ohio:

Don't underinflate. Underinflation and overloading account for fully 90 per cent. of all tire trouble.

Don't neglect small cuts. These will often extend further than you think. Dirt and water get in, the fabric rots, and a blowout follows. Look over your tires from time to time and repair small cuts.

Don't run in ruts, car tracks, or against curbing. The side walls of a tire are much thinner than the tread and will not stand this kind of usage.

Don't start or stop suddenly or skid around corners. The strain thus set up in your tires is terrific.

Don't run on a flat tire. Better run on the rim if only for a short distance.

Don't let oil, grease, or gasoline remain on your tires. They all destroy rubber. Wash only with pure cold water and a little soap.

Don't keep a spare tire out of use too long. Change over occasionally. A tire lasts better in use than exposed to the sun and rain on the running-board or suspended at the rear.

Don't let your rims get rusty. Common stove polish will keep them in good condition.

Don't let the weight rest on a deflated tire. Jack up the wheel or remove the tire.

Don't let your axles or rims become bent. If your wheel doesn't turn free and true, your tires will suffer. If your wheels are not in line, remedy the trouble—you are dragging your tires. They will show a rapid and one-sided wear not generally understood by motorists, and usually blamed on the tire.

TEST ROADS FOR TRUCKS.

Government Bureau Seeking Data for Best Highway Material.

Pyke Johnson, Secretary of the Highways Committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, has notified the members of the chamber that preliminary road impact tests, made by the Bureau of Public Roads, indicate that the impact pressure exerted by a motor truck in motion is about six times that of a truck at rest. The tests were conducted with a Class B Government truck loaded up to five tons, running up to fifteen miles an hour and allowed to fall from varying heights on the impact measuring apparatus.

The question of the relative impact exerted by trucks with solid versus giant pneumatic tires will also be investigated. Arrangements have been made to secure a standard three-ton truck with requisite tire equipment for the tests and a loan of other units would be welcomed by the officials.

Tests to show the resistance of various types of road surface such as concrete, asphalt, &c., will soon be undertaken. About fifty road slabs built of these materials will be broken under the impact of a machine which approximates the impact effect delivered by motor trucks. By measuring the amount of impact actually delivered by the motor truck to roads and by proceeding further in testing the destruction of actual road slabs subjected to impact, the Government officials hope to obtain definite information which will permit them to design a high type pavement that will resist definite traffic conditions.

NEWS OF THE AUTO TRADE WORLD.

The Wilkes-Barre Automobile Club has issued an excellent tour card covering Northeastern Pennsylvania, showing routes to Delaware Water Gap, the Pocono Mountains, Wyoming Valley, Gettysburg and many other places. Peter G. Rimmer, President of the club, will supply motorists preparing to tour there with copies on application.

New Directors of the Auburn Automobile Company, recently elected are: William Wrigley, Jr., A. F. Kemp, formerly of the H. H. Franklin Manufacturing Company, who becomes First Vice President and Treasurer of the Auburn concern; H. H. Hitchcock of Chicago, Ralph A. Baird, and Judge James H. Rose of Fort Wayne, Ind. Maurice Eckhart remains as President.

The first shipment to this city of the new six-cylinder Reo cars is expected this week by James J. Hunt, general manager of the Reo Motor Car Company of New York.

Prices for the 1920 Buick models will remain unchanged, except for the coupe and the sedan, on which slight advances have been made, due to superior body work. The new five-passenger sedan will be $2,255, and $2,695 for the seven-passenger sedan.

The Cole Motor Car Company is equipping all of its models with an automatic brake adjuster which makes annoying adjustment of the service brake unnecessary.

Earl J. Moon has been elected Vice President of the Moon Motor Car Company of St. Louis. He is the son of the late Joseph W. Moon, founder of the company, and a graduate of Princeton.

Announcement is made by the Dort Motor Car Company of the appointment of Ralph B. Dort as director of sales for Europe. Mr. Dort was recently discharged from the U. S. Marine Corps. His headquarters will be in Paris.

Fred C. Cole, Jr., has formed a company to handle the United States trucks in New York and Connecticut. P. B. Haynes is secretary and general manager. Offices are at 230 West Fifty-fourth Street.

H. M. Bacon is now connected with the McGraw Tire and Rubber Company as general sales manager, with headquarters in Cleveland. He had been with the Diamond Rubber Company for eight years.

Several important changes in the personnel of the Fulton Motor Truck Company have just been made. George C. Sherman, President of the Universal Tobacco Machine Company and the advertising agency of Sherman & Bryan, replaces W. F. Mellhuish, Jr., as President; Carl Fagy has been elected Vice President in charge of sales and advertising, and F. G. Saunders of San Antonio is the new Treasurer. Executive offices have been taken in the new Ford Building, Broadway and Fifty-fourth Street.

The special 1920 model of the Reo will be a six-cylinder car, having a wheelbase of 120 inches, and with many refinements, but adhering to the general Reo characteristics.

Byron H. Riess is associated with the Charles E. Riess Company in the wholesale distribution of the Columbia car at 1,737 Broadway.

Albert N. Atkinson has received many replies offering jobs to returned soldiers as chauffeurs and mechanics since he offered to open a free employment agency at his automobile school, 250 West Fiftieth Street.

The scissors test, as suggested by the Norwalk Tire Company, is made by taking a piece of tube one-quarter inch by three inches long and stretching it to nine inches. When slightly snipped on the edge, if it tears apart the rubber is inferior; if it does not tear, it is proof of quality.

William C. Poertner, local distributer for National and Scripps-Booth cars, has received word that Lucius French, advertising manager for the National Motor Car and Vehicle Corporation, has resigned to become Secretary of the Western Oil Refining Company of Indianapolis.

F. B. Wright of the Esta Company, at 1,846 Broadway, states that kerosene mixed half and half with water in the Esta carbon eliminator is giving excellent results, not only in preventing carbon but in giving added power to the motor.

Walter C. White, Vice President of the White Company, has been made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor by the French Republic. It was conferred in recognition of the services rendered to France by the White Company during the war.

The Touring Bureau of the Goodrich Rubber Company expects to distribute to motorists nearly 5,000,000 State highway maps this year. Requests have been heavier than ever before and have increased with each week during the Summer months.

Use O-Cedar Polish the O-Cedar Polish Way

First, remove mud, dust, etc., from your car by washing with water in the usual way.

If you have used oils, or wax, it is best to use Ivory Soap to remove them.

Pour about 4 ounces of O-Cedar in a pan and add a quart of warm water. Saturate a clean cloth in this and go over the body of the car. Do not attempt to clean too much at a time—take one side of the body or a fender first. Follow by rubbing with a dry cloth. But little rubbing is required to produce a hard, dry, lasting lustre.

NATIONAL HIGHWAYS FOR MOTOR TRAFFIC

State Roads Must Be Linked Together in Comprehensive System—Country-Wide Interest

The Lincoln Highway, the first of the national highways which cross the country, is only six years old, and in another six years it is expected that it may be established as a permanent hard-surface road from the Atlantic Coast to the Rocky Mountains. The Lincoln Highway Association was organized in 1913. The route extends from New York to Philadelphia, thence through Pittsburgh and Chicago to Omaha, then across Nebraska to Cheyenne and on to Salt Lake City and San Francisco.

Today, from one end of the Lincoln Highway to the other, nothing short of permanent paving is talked of as the goal of Lincoln Highway boosters. Reports from headquarters of the Association indicate that the 1919 season will not only be a record breaker from the standpoint of highway construction, but also in the use of American highways. The Association has experienced an unusual demand for transcontinental touring information, inquiries coming from motorists in every State in the Union.

Not only are road conditions on the highway improved, as compared with other years, but hotel accommodations are much better. No longer need tourists feel it necessary to carry extra gasoline supplies or camping outfits for fear of being stranded somewhere too far from a hotel or a motor station. The travel over the highway during the last few years has stimulated the establishment of garages, supply stations, and hotels at convenient intervals.

Following is a statement recently compiled showing the road conditions of the Lincoln Highway over the transcontinental route of 3,727 miles.

In Utah, at the present time, one of the greatest pieces of road construction ever attempted in this country is in progress across the Great Salt Lake desert and the bed of the prehistoric Lake Bonneville. On this great desert is a surface of salt that is hard enough and smooth enough for motor car driving, but underneath there is a sort of volcanic mud, as sticky as wet clay. It is wet because the seepage from the mountains that ring the crust of the lake makes it and keeps it so all the year. The surface crust soon lets the car down into the mire. The desert has a tragic history. It forced detours in the old Overland trail; it added to the hardships of the Forty-niners and occasionally the bones of some of its victims are unearthed.

Men are now at work in the fierce heat building and grading a road that will cut across it as straight as an arrow. When their task is finished, which is expected to be in the Fall, the Lincoln Highway will add another large link to its system of admirable road which will redound to the benefit not only of motorists but to hundreds of other road users in the great western section.

Motion Pictures by Truck.

Dr. Francis Holley, Director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics at Washington, announces that through the request of Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State of New York, his bureau would supervise the exhibition throughout New York of industrial motion pictures produced to stimulate interest in good roads and to visualize common faults of automobile and motor truck drivers.

The films will be a part of the equipment of one of a fleet of seven trucks the bureau is using in the free exploitation of motion pictures throughout the country. The New York tour will start about Aug. 10.

Truck Owners in Motor League.

A commercial branch of the League for Motorists' Protection has been organized for the purpose of admitting owners of motor trucks to membership. Harry W. Gaston, President of the league, says that chauffeurs operating trucks will not be eligible. Membership will be limited to the owner, who by joining shows his wish to restrain operators of other trucks from acts of recklessness and that he is willing to report violations. Mr. Gaston says that 7,000 members have already joined the organization.

TOURING IN MAINE.

Roads to Popular Resorts Better Than Ever Before.

Maine has made wonderful strides in improving trunk lines throughout the State, and automobiles are now being used for all purposes, reports O. M. Wells, chief roadman of the Automobile Club of America, who has recently returned from a road-investigating tour. Every farmer has a small car, which he uses for trips to town. Fishermen use automobiles to carry their canoes to the lakes and ponds, and salesmen travel by train and motor. The mail is delivered by automobile eight months in the year. Even small theatrical companies use the motor car. Motor trucks are hauling dressed lumber from portable mills to the freight cars. This progress in transportation means that the highways have been greatly improved. Public opinion is thoroughly alive on the question of good roads in Maine, and the last few years have seen great changes for the better.

From Portsmouth to Portland, through the Yorks, Kennebunk, and Biddeford, the road is hard surfaced and in good condition. There is a good road from Kennebunk to Kennebunkport, also from Saco through Old Orchard and Pine Point back to Dunstan.

The coast road between Portland and Bangor, through Brunswick, Rockland, and Belfast, is free from detours and 75 per cent. good, and, with the exception of a few stretches which are somewhat worn, is in better condition than ever before.

Many motorists use the Bucksport Ferry and then run through Orland and West Ellsworth to Ellsworth and then up to Bar Harbor, which is considerably shorter, but the road surface is not as good, as there are steep hills between Prospect and the ferry. Better time can be made by continuing on to Bangor and then over the old telegraph road, which has been surfaced and is in excellent condition through Brewer, Green Lake, and North Ellsworth to Ellsworth.

The section of the shore road from Wiscasset to Waldoboro through Damariscotta, which has been under construction for the last three years, is now finished and open, thus eliminating the detour via Sheepscot.

Motorists going from Augusta to Quebec will find road conditions good through Waterville, Skowhegan, and Bingham. From there on to the Canadian line at Armstrong is a dirt road, quite narrow, making it necessary to drive with caution. Motorists should sound horn frequently, as cars can pass only where turnouts are provided.

The Great Northern Paper Company has built forty miles of good gravel road from Kineo around the upper end of the lake through the Great North Woods, which is a very interesting run. Arrangements can be made at Greenville Junction to have the car taken aboard the boat for Kineo. Belgrade and the Rangeley Lakes can be reached over fair roads.

The Poland Springs-White Mountain trunk line is in good condition to the State line just beyond Fryeburg, with the exception of a short stretch between Bridgeton and Naples and between Naples and Webbs Mills. Considerable improvement has been made on the Saco Valley route from Portland to Fryeburg.

Motorists going from Maine up to Dixville Notch will find it better to go from Poland Springs and Bath, then over to Gorham and up the Androscoggin Valley, or follow the White Mountain route from Portland and run north through the Pinkham Notch from North Conway to Gorham, connecting with the Androscoggin Valley route, as the Grafton Notch route from Bethel through Grafton and Upton to Errol is narrow and very hilly, with a long stretch of rough surface.

To reach Winter Harbor, which is directly opposite Bar Harbor on Frenchman's Bay, a right fork is taken at North Hancock, and the ferry across from Hancock to West Sullivan, then through Asheville to West Goldsboro, again turning right and running due south through South Goldsboro to Winter Harbor.

SHOW TRUCKS TO FARMERS.

Novel Demonstrating Tour Starts This Week from Chicago.

A motor truck development tour will start from Chicago tomorrow on a 3,000-mile run through six States, including Illinois, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. The itinerary will take in seventy cities.

The tour will be conducted by the National Association of Motor Truck Sales Managers. Twenty trucks, all equipped with pneumatic tires and ranging from one to two and a half tons, will participate. They represent as many makers, as only one entry has been allowed from a factory. Demonstrations will be given to prove the economy of the motor vehicle. Many types of bodies will be carried, and demonstrations will be arranged to carry loose hay for the farmers, pick up a load of live stock, wheat, oats, or anything else they may wish to transport to the city. Actual account will be kept of the mileage covered, the gasoline consumption, the oil used, the character of the roads, and other essentials which will be compiled for accurate data on truck performance.

The United States Government has given its approval to this tour by furnishing a naval band.

No Rye-Oyster Bay Ferry.

The projected ferry from Rye to Oyster Bay, which was announced recently as being about ready to open, has not yet been put in operation, although the management states that it hopes to get it in running order before the close of the season. The Rye-Sea Cliff Ferry is, therefore, the only ferry available to motorists from the former point.

Farmers as Automobile Owners.

Pennsylvania farmers, according to a recent report from the Department of Agriculture of that State, own 81,505 automobiles. The motor-car owning farmers represent 37 per cent. of the number of persons engaged in agriculture in the State, a gain of 14 per cent. within the last two years.

Keeping Father Fit

"I'LL grant that I was stale, that the job was an effort and that every day dawned like a drab year. But how to get back to the old-time snap, punch and 'pep.'

"Friend wife solved the problem—with the kiddies' help—that's how Schoonmaker & Jacod had the opportunity to show me their cars. They were perfectly frank, gave me facts first; explained why they purchase only cars of the better types and how their Service Engineers overhaul every car. Am I fit? Look me over! The open life, the curving roads and ever changing scenes will make any man fitter."

To Control Excess Oil

A special ring for motors that are oil guzzlers. Use in the top groove of each piston. In the lower grooves, use McQuay-Norris Leak-Proof Piston Rings for full compression—power.

Turn all the gas you buy into power. Make sure that none of it leaks past your piston rings. Make certain all your gas is compressed and turned into power. You can do it by installing the genuine McQuay-Norris Leak-Proof Piston Rings.

Their exclusive two-piece design insures equal action all around the cylinder wall. That's why they are the only piston rings of their kind. There's no such thing as a "leak-proof type" of piston ring. Leak-Proof is the trade-marked name of this particular ring. Be sure you get the genuine.

They are made in every size and over-size to fit every model and make of motor.

Your repair man can get the proper sizes for you promptly from his jobber's complete stock.

We want your criticism

EVERY car owner has his own motor car ideals—knows in his own mind how good a car should be and what it should be able to do.

You have such ideals. And we are anxious for you to tell us whether the new-style Winton Six measures up to them.

Frankly, this car has amazed us: but we are probably prejudiced. We never saw an automobile more beautiful to look at or more delightful to drive or to ride in. We think it marvelous.

Perhaps you will agree with us. We even believe that you will. But what we want is to have you see this car, and try it, and then tell us what you actually think about it. Simply telephone.

FAT IN MAILS FOR GERMANY

Sausages, Bacon, and Ham from Kinsfolk Here Fill Sacks Now That Postal Relations Are Resumed

THE fat is in the mail, which means that postal intercourse between Germany and the United States has been resumed. Under the blaze of the sun of August the stations and the substations of the New York Post Office are besieged by Teutons bearing gifts of lard and butter and sausage for their kith and kin beyond the Rhine. The moment the Postmaster, Thomas E. Patten, gave notice that the pouches for the land of the Rhine were open once more, there was a general skurry to the butcher shops and the grocers to get the articles of diet which had been most missed in Germany since the beginning of the European war. Ninety-nine per cent. of all articles sent to German addresses by parcel post were foodstuffs, and in this classification the fats and fatty substances predominated.

You who have happened to be in stations when long queues of persons of Teutonic visage stood in line may have noticed that the packages they offered for transmission to Hamburg and Berlin were usually flat and thin, for they were filled with linked fatness, long drawn out. "All sausage must be in waxed paper," the clerks repeat in a sing-song way of the old story. "Are you sure that the grease won't come through?"

The butter is being sent in tins and so is the lard, while the best American bacon is protected in boxes and metal cases. The wholesale grocers and the packers have been doing a big business in the original cases. As much fat as can be sent in one package—eleven pounds—is on its way. Considering that the postal rate is 12 cents the pound for such merchandise, the hams and bacon and American wurst cost a pretty penny by the time they reach their destinations. As seen from the markings on the packages, all these are sent not by dealers direct, but by friends and relatives, who realize the unctuous need overseas. There has been a long dearth and many hinges must be lubricated before the creak will be out of war-ridden Germany.

In some sections of the metropolis where there is a large population of Teutonic origin may be seen tempting window displays of porcine products, rather hot eating for August, but highly seasonable at this time for ocean shipping.

The notice given in the newspapers late in July caused the suspended postal facilities with Germany to come to life overnight. The first shipment went over to the Teuton territory by way of Christiansand on the steamship United States under the neutral Norwegian flag. Although only brief notice was given in the newspapers, the substations and stations were almost overwhelmed by the senders of mail for Germany. Extra clerks were summoned from other branches and days off were forgotten in the scramble to get the mail ready. The schedules providing for only a few sacks were increased overnight. Requisitions for ten sacks grew in a few hours into a demand for hundreds. The ranks of the package bearers increased until they extended out into the streets.

Daniel E. Jordan, Assistant Superintendent of the Division of Mails, said the other day that the mail to Germany grew like a mushroom, out of nothing. When hostilities were first declared, 5,000 sacks of mail matter for Germany had accumulated. After it had been sorted out by the censors it was sent back to the senders, and every few weeks there was a clearance of the letters and packages which some unwitting Teutons, who scorned to read the papers, had consigned to relatives overseas. There was no mail anywhere in sight up to July 22, when the first steamship got under way. Then came the deluge.

The registered articles in that first shipment on the United States consisted of 4,466, all carefully wrapped and prepared against exposure and too sudden heat. In the parcel post bags, so redolent of smoked meats and tinned goodness and fatness, were 4,301 registered packages and 4,111 consigned at the ordinary rate.

The first consignment of letters numbered 195,000, packed in 141 bags.

There were also 175 bags of printed matter, in which there were in all 6,400 pieces.

The Juliano, bound for Rotterdam and Hamburg from the port of New York, which she left on the 23d of July, had 150 bags of parcel post mostly filled with the foodstuffs, and 30 bags of letters, averaging about 3,500 letters each.

On board the Alfred Nobel, the first steamship to go to Hamburg direct, there were 16,383 parcel post packages distributed in 2,700 sacks, which shows that they were very bulky, indeed, and as the sausages and the hams predominated they were heavy enough to keep the mail handlers always on the jump.

Well-Wrapped Packages.

So carefully had all the packages been prepared that there was only one out of all this catalogue in the three steamships which had to be rejected because of the perishable nature of its contents. Some of the packages were rewrapped at the Foreign Mails Division, but as a general thing the packages of gifts for the Rhineland were prepared with every attention to detail. Waxed papers, sealing tapes, stout strings and papers reinforced with canvas were employed to insure safe delivery. No bonbons nor sweets, as far as could be seen, appeared in these shipments, for fat is evidently considered more of a luxury in the late realm of the Kaiser than all the saccharine titbits ever made.

The values of the parcel post packages varied from $1 to $15 each. As far as the Post Office officials could see there were no homemade articles of food in the consignments, for most of them were obviously from the canners or the wholesale food factors just as they appeared in the mails.

The printed matter seemed mostly composed of food for thought to be gained from a thorough digestion of American newspapers and magazines and books dealing with the European war.

Much as Germans in this and other cities may have wished to send money to relatives abroad, they had up to this writing had no opportunity to do anything of that kind directly by mail. The fiscal system of Germany is chaotic and such a thing as a money order is now out of the question. There is no fixed rate of exchange and no means of transmitting money except by cumbersome and indirect methods through other countries.

At every station throughout the city many inquirers have been gathering, asking how they can get money to the principal German cities. The clerks throw up their hands and say that for the present there is no way. It will be many weeks before any definite arrangement can be made along these lines.

As soon as they are satisfied that no money can be sent they dispatch that which is now almost worth its weight in gold to some Germans, the American pork and tinned meats which they have so sorely missed and affected to scorn in the piping days of peace.

It is understood that this month there will be at least one steamship with a mail every week for Germany, and possibly two or three more will be added before the arrival of September. Every one will go over with bulging sacks, for no matter how much the postal officials plan to meet the demand, the German mail usually develops into an avalanche.

WALKS OF "Y" WORKERS

FORTY-EIGHT professions and vocations are represented in the latest roster of Y. M. C. A. men workers overseas. There were 1,618 secretaries who describe themselves merely as "business men," generally employers, as distinguished from the 247 salesmen, 48 clerks, and others engaged in commercial pursuits. Among the 675 educators were college and university professors, city superintendents of schools, and many school teachers. A factory worker drew the same allowance as each of the 80 bankers. A miner, a steamship captain, and three policemen worked side by side with some of the 258 lawyers. Two rabbis were on the volunteer staff. Roman Catholics as well as Protestants and Jews were by the list.

More than 10,000 American men and women, in uniform, have passed through the corridors of the Y. M. C. A. headquarters building at 12 Rue d'Aguesseau, Paris, in the last two years. The men's occupational list, showing recruits from almost every walk of life, is as follows:

Business men	1,018	Entertainers	173
Ministers	699	Y. M. C. A. Workers	157
Salesmen	427	Clerks	148
Engineers	275	Accountants	111
Lawyers	258	Bankers	80
Insurance men	163	Automobile men	73
Agents or Solicitors	135	Manufacturers	69
Writers	113	Physicians	46
Engineers	95	Architects	31
Physical directors	76	Cinema men	29
Painters	69	Printers	27
Artists	47	Post Office employes	25
Students	36	Hotel men	23
Metal workers	29	Lecturers	18
Railroad men	28	Discharged soldiers	11
Government employes	26	Chemists	6
Dentists	25	Opticians	3
Real estate men	21	Rabbis	2
Druggists	17	Inventor	1
Photographers	9	Factory worker	1
Undertakers	5	Librarian	1
Policemen	3	Miner	1
Advertising men	1	Statistician	1
Florist	1	Retired or occupation not given	24
Steamship captain	1

Among the women, educators lead, but thirty other callings are represented. There are two printers, two dentists, a banker and a manufacturer in the list which follows:

Educators	677	Stenographers	132
Social workers	164	Artists	66
Clerks	140	Librarians	43
Business women	87	Y. M. C. A. workers	18
Writers	53	Physical directors	16
Students	37	Hotels, tea rooms, &c.	7
Accountants	18	Government employes	6
Farmers	15	Lawyers	4
Nurses	7	Medical workers	6
Insurance women	6	Printers	3
Lecturers	4	Architects	3
Photographers	4	Managers	2
Automobilists	2	Post Office employe	1
Dentists	2
Banker	1
Manufacturer	1
Dietitians	365
Secretaries	157	No occupation	485

A supplementary list shows that among the later arrivals of secretaries in Europe the educators among the men are 31 per cent. of the total, instead of 12, and the entertainers 7 per cent. instead of 3. Among the women the percentage of educators rose from 26 to 29, and of professional entertainers from 13 to 18. Also, in recent months, hundreds of soldiers have been transferred to Y service.

It was obviously impossible that every man should get just the job he wanted. A vast majority of the secretaries arriving before the armistice, according to the Y officials, were insistent upon getting to the front or as close to the front as they could be sent. There were hundreds who had tried to be soldiers, and were rejected by the army. The service of ministers as Y men has been a subject of interesting comment. The clergymen were from all sections of America and of varied opinions. There was a Western minister, for instance, who went to France with a reputation as an implacable foe of secular amusements on Sundays. He became a divisional director. One Monday morning he called in his physical director, and administered a stern rebuke. The two all but quarreled, because the director had staged only one Sunday afternoon baseball game when the preacher believed there should have been a double-header.

A Middle Westerner, who in peace times had managed a business of more than a million and a half dollars a year, ran a Y. M. C. A. hut. So did the South American representative of a New England manufacturing company and a New York banker. There were no union hours. The working day began before reveille aroused the soldier, and continued till after taps at night.

An Important Sale of Beautiful

Sterling Silver Flatware

33 1-3 to 50% below regular prices

With silver at the highest price in forty years, a saving like this is astonishing.

But the International Silver Co., of Meriden, which made this handsome table silver, found it had too many similar patterns, so discontinued this one, the "Wellesley"—and we bought the whole quantity.

It is a beautiful design, as the illustration shows; in a substantial weight, and gray finish. In a complete assortment of so-called "dozen goods" and separate serving pieces—the former one-third, the latter one-half less than regular prices.

The Best Way to use Rouge

The specialist who created the wonderful La-may Face Powder has invented a new rouge. The rouge is inside the puff. All you do is to rub the puff on your face. It comes through the puff just as you need it. It goes on splendidly and stays on the face until you wash it off. The puff is in a dainty metal box. The box cannot break and the rouge will not crumble like the old-fashioned kind. This newly invented rouge is called La-may (French, Rouge L'Amé). It gives a beautiful color that looks natural under the strongest light. There are two colors—medium and dark. The fifty-cent package will last six months, yet the box is small enough to fit your purse. When you use this pure, harmless Rouge and see how much more convenient it is and how much better it stays on, you will understand why thousands of women say it is the best they have ever used. Because La-may Rouge is so new, your dealer may not have it yet, but he can easily get it. Show this notice to your dealer and if he refuses to get you a package you may order by mail from Herbert Roystone, 16 E. 18th St., New York.

FASCINATING, distinctive Butterfly Talc—a Babcock inspiration, web-soft and impalpably fine, and exhaling a captivating, memorable fragrance like a refreshing breath from a garden of rare flowers!

This exquisite toilet adjunct is a Babcock masterpiece comparable in delicacy and harmony only with that other Babcock triumph, Corylopsis.

Butterfly is a fragrance of inimitable richness, yet delicate, enduring, smart. It is such a creation as heretofore has been obtainable only as a de luxe and limited production for private patrons.

Blended with talc, mist-like in softness and lightness, Butterfly lends its name and appealing redolence to the wholly delightful Butterfly Talc.

Are You a Blond?

The Secret of Making People Like You

© Kraus L. A.

Wallace Reid
Star in "The Valley of the Giants" A Paramount-Artcraft Picture

ONE of the greatest assets any man can possibly have is the faculty for making people like him.

The secret of making people like you lies in your ability to understand the emotional and mental characteristics of the people you meet.

Did you know that most blonds have different temperaments than most brunets? —that to get along with a blond type you must act different than you would to get along with a brunet?

When you really know the difference between blonds and brunets, the difference in their characters, temperaments, abilities and peculiar traits you will save yourself many a mistake—and you will incidentally learn much you never knew before about yourself.

* * * * *

PAUL GRAHAM was a blond, and not until he learned that there was all the difference in the world between the general characteristics of a blond and those of a brunet did he discover the secret of making people like him.

Paul had been keeping books for years for a large corporation which had branches all over the country. It was generally thought by his associates that he would never rise above that job. He had a tremendous ability with figures—could wind them around his little finger—but he did not have the ability to mix with big men; did not know how to make people like him.

Then one day the impossible happened. Paul Graham became popular.

Business men of importance who had formerly given him only a passing nod of acquaintance showed a desire for his friendship. People frequently went out of their way to do things for him.

From the time the change took place he began to go up in business. Now he is the Head Auditor for his corporation at a good increase in salary.

You, too, can have the power of making people like you. For by the same method used by Paul Graham, you can tell the characteristics of men, women or children—tell their likes and dislikes, and YOU MAY MAKE PEOPLE LIKE YOU. Here is how it is done:

Everyone you know can be placed in one of two general types—blond or brunet. There is a big difference between the mental and emotional characteristics of a blond and those of a brunet. You persuade a blond in one way—a brunet in another. Blonds enjoy one phase of life—brunets another. Blonds make good in one kind of a job—brunets in one entirely different.

To know these differences scientifically is the first step in judging men and women; in getting on well with them; in mastering their minds; in winning their respect, admiration, love and friendship.

And when you have learned these differences—when you can tell what to do and say to make a man or woman like you, there is a greater assurance of your success in life.

For example, there's the case of a large manufacturing concern. Trouble sprang up at one of the factories. The men talked strike. Things looked ugly. Harry Winslow was sent to straighten it out. On the eve of a general walkout he pacified the men and headed off the strike. And not only this, but ever since then, that factory has led all the others for production. He was able to do this, because he was able to make these men do what he wanted them to do.

Another case, entirely different, is that of Henry Peters. Because of his ability to make people like him—his faculty for "getting under the skin" and making people think his way, he was given the position of Assistant to the President of a large firm. Two other men, both well liked by their fellow-employes, had each expected to get the job. So when the outside man, Peters, came in, he was looked upon by everyone as an interloper and was openly disliked by every other person in the office.

Peters was handicapped in every way. But in spite of that, in three weeks he had made fast friends of everyone in the house and had even won over the two men who had been most bitter against him. The whole secret is that he appeared to know how to make himself well liked.

A certain woman who had this ability moved with her family to another town. As is often the case, it is a very difficult thing for any woman to break into the chill circle of society in this town, if she was not known. But her ability to make people like her soon won for her the close friendship of many of the "best families" in the town. Some people wonder how she did it. It was simply the secret at work—the secret of judging people's character and making them like you.

* * * * *

YOU realize, of course, that just knowing the difference between a blond and a brunet could not accomplish all these wonderful things. There are other things to be taken into account. But here is the whole secret.

You know that everyone does not think alike. What one likes another dislikes. And what offends one pleases another. Well, there is your cue. You can make a "hit" with anyone, if you say the things they want you to say, and act the way they want you to act.

You may do this by knowing certain simple signs. In addition to the difference in complexion, every man, woman and child has written on them signs as distinct as though they were in letters a foot high, which show you what to say and to do to please them—to get them to believe—to think as you think.

In knowing these simple signs is a secret of getting what you want out of life—of making friends, of business and social advantage. Great leaders use this method. Use it yourself and you should become a leader.

You have heard of Dr. Blackford, the Master Character Analyst. Some concerns will not employ a man without first getting Dr. Blackford to pass on him. Concerns such as Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Baker-Vawter Company, Scott Paper Company and many others pay Dr. Blackford annual fees for advice on human nature.

So great was the demand for these services that Dr. Blackford could not even begin to fill all the engagements. So Dr. Blackford has explained the method in a simple, seven-lesson course, entitled, "Reading Character at Sight." Even a half hour's reading of this wonderful course will give you an insight into human nature which will surprise you.

Such confidence have the publishers in Dr. Blackford's course, "Reading Character at Sight," that they will gladly send it to you on approval, all charges prepaid. Look it over thoroughly. See if it lives up to all the claims made for it. If you do not want to keep it, then return it and the transaction is closed. And if you decide to keep it—as you surely will—then merely remit five dollars in full payment.

Remember, you take no risk, you assume no obligation. The entire course goes to you on approval. You have everything to gain—nothing to lose. So mail the coupon NOW, and learn how to make people like you, while this remarkable offer is still on.

WHICH SHALL REMAKE PEACE, GERMANY OR DEMOCRACY?

"If the peoples who hold to the democratic hope fail in this their hour of trial, if they fail to charge themselves with the radical remaking of the Peace of Paris, then Germany will make the new peace, and, after a time of chaos, eventually reorganize Europe."

"She will subsidize and intensively cultivate now, as she has hitherto subsidized and cultivated, every subversive or disintegrating movement throughout Europe, Asia, and Africa—and in America also."

"The Bolshevism which she fostered in Russia, and which keeps for Germany her eastern gates, will be spread abroad by her agencies."

"The chief agency which Germany will use for yet procuring a peace according to her liking is the official Socialist Movement."

"Another important if not equally powerful agency for yet procuring a German peace is Germany's organized economic penetration. This was incredibly universal before the war; it continued during the war; it proceeds now."

"She has long ago prepared for defeat—she is today preparing for defeat—as thoroughly as she was previously prepared for war."

"The machinery of her industry is unharmed, ready for operation the moment peace is signed."

"German commercial efficiency can be dealt with only by a more highly energized efficiency of our own."

"The Great War is but a prelude to a greater war; and this greater war—the war between Germanism and democracy—now spreads its vaster and more fateful fields."

By GEORGE D. HERRON.

I.

WITHOUT discussing whether American Senators hostile to the Peace of Paris be inspired by patriotism or party politics, no matter whether high or low their motives, their present action will prove of advantage only to the German and the Bolshevik.

I am myself among those who see no permanent peace coming out of Paris. I see no fellowship of democratic peoples, no true Society of Nations, provided by the covenant which the conference has adopted. But, though the peace be provisional only, though the League be far from the Society of Nations for which we hoped, nothing can be gained by the allied peoples through delay in confirming the work, imperfect as it is, of the conference. On the contrary, by rejection or delay, everything for which we fought, both in the war and since the armistice, may be lost. Moreover, if the treaty and the covenant be accepted and ratified immediately—especially with a clear understanding, on the part of the democratic peoples, of the merely rudimentary or germinal character of these instruments—they can hence be changed and developed into a durable peace, and a Society of Nations may yet take the place of the League for Dominion which issues from Paris.

The present peace is all that can be expected from the conference, constituted as it is; and it is the best that can be expected from existing Governments. It is the Peace of Paris, for the moment, or no peace at all—perhaps for more than one generation. If we accept this peace, however provisionally, we may at least hope that sanity will come to a world which has been for a long time, even for many years before the war, without sanity or sense or true progress. To reject it, or to delay its confirmation, means the disintegration of a civilization already shattered to its foundations and sick with every civil and social disease.

I know that international despair prevails; it would seem as if no faith were discoverable upon the earth. Yet, terrible as the human plight is, black and deep and wide as is the abyss upon which we seem to be brinked, there is withal a ground of hope beneath our feet that has never been there before; and, strangely and paradoxically enough, we may behold, if we have discerning eyes, braver immediate prospects than have hitherto been ours.

For it is certain that the world will never go back to where it was before the war; the old order can never be restored; nothing less than a free, federate, and truly socialized world will henceforth content mankind, and upon this certainty we may internationally proceed.

WHAT THE GERMANS THINK OF BOLSHEVISM AT HOME.
Though They Encourage It in Other Countries, This Poster With the Legend "Bolshevism Means a World Drowned in Blood," Shows That in Their Own Germany They Want None of It.

II.

The future, however, depends upon this: will the democratic peoples, having provisionally accepted the Peace of Paris, then awake quickly and act collectively—act with clear and purposeful heads, with clean and resolute souls? Will they see and resolve upon a course of reconstruction that cancels the peril of an international Bolshevist revolution and class dictatorship on the one side, and prevents a reversion to reactionary and merely capitalist social control on the other? It is between these two perils, each menacing the world with unimaginable miseries and tyrannies, that democracy must now shape its course—the only course that leads to the world's nobler remaking.

And if now we clear-sightedly and courageously prepare and walk the democratic way, it may well be we shall be wondrously reinforced; it may be we shall indeed find that they who fight for us are more than they that be against us. We may find that the millions who sacrificially died are now valiantly with us in our struggle for the new world wherewith so many of them are envisioned. We may find that the war's physical and moral devastation, that the hate and the hatefulness which seem to have permeated and degraded the world since the signing of the armistice, that the seeming universal breakdown of truth and fidelity and all spiritual decency—that all these are but the harvest of a manifold ancient wickedness, now to be gathered and cast into the unquenchable fire. And it may be, finally, that just as the war, which so few foresaw or believed possible, was the precipitation of history's black passions and forces, so now a collective resolution and consecration of the democratic peoples may predicate a great and un-

The World Metropolis: New York or London?

Twin Wonder Cities Will Tie in Population in 1932, British Journalist Believes, and Wall Street Will Become the Partner, Not the Rival, of Lombard Street

By F. A. McKENZIE.

FIVE years ago there were two world capitals, Paris, the artistic, and London, the commercial and financial headquarters. Paris, despite the stress of war, retains her ancient place. There is none to dispute it. But London must look to her laurels. New York has grown to her stature. Today New York is nearing London in population; the two cities are running a neck-and-neck race for supremacy in world shipping; and New York has ousted London from her place as the centre of world wealth.

The war strengthened New York and drained the resources of London. The North Sea, the gateway of the Thames, was closed by mine, submarine, and raiding destroyers, while Ambrose Channel remained open. London, long the richest city in the world, pawned her securities, which for centuries had brought tribute from the ends of the earth, by the billion, to pay for gold and goods for England and her allies; most of these securities were absorbed by New York.

All the world had to come to America for manufactured goods. In other words, all the world had to come to New York, for nearly one-half of America's foreign trade goes through this port. The elaborate machinery for world commerce which London merchants had built up by centuries of enterprise, from the days when Elizabethan venturers sent their expeditions to Barbary, the Caribbean and around the Cape to the Indies, rusted. There was no time to manufacture goods, and no ships to spare to carry even what there were. A man cannot tend the counter when the burglar has his hand on his throat. The young Englishmen who held watch and ward for London in the outlands of the world took the first boats back home to don khaki when war was declared in August, 1914. Napoleon sneered at the Britisher as a shopkeeper; but shopkeeping counted very small then.

London emerged from the war not ruined—not by any manner of means—but impoverished. Over a hundred thousand young Londoners had lost their lives; at least an equal number were permanently stricken. Everything had been sacrificed for victory. There had been no time to mend the streets, to paint the houses, to build needed homes. Men were wearied, caught up in the inevitable reaction that follows a tremendous and long-continued strain. The gold had gone from the bank coffers; the securities had been depleted; happily credit remained, and character strengthened by war. New York emerged scarce showing a scratch, stronger, richer, more populous, and more powerful than ever in her history.

Today we are witnessing the slow, steady revival of London, and the efforts of New York to employ her new strength and power to best advantage. In these first months of peace New York finds her position as advantageous as in the days of war. For many months to come the world at large must turn to her for aid. But soon we will see a renewed London stretching itself forth again.

And if war cost London much, it gave it much also. It proved that generations of commerce had not robbed a people of their soul, and it gave the British people a new incentive for social reform more drastic than once seemed possible. New York and London are both concerned with the prosperity of each other. If by some strange freak of nature New York were wiped off the map tomorrow, London would go bankrupt, and vice versa. The two are partners rather than rivals, but partners conducting different branches, and each determined to show the other what he can do.

No two cities could well present a greater contrast. Manhattan is an island of rock, bordering on a bay opening into the Atlantic; London is an inland valley of sand and clay. New York proclaims its majesty and wealth to every visitor by its titanic sky line, that seems as though it would storm the very heavens. London conceals its wealth behind shabby exteriors of low elevation. London is scattered over a wide area, covering 669 square miles; the majority of the population of New York is crowded on three dozen square miles. New York overwhelms one with its evidences of power and of human accomplishment; London at first often disappoints, but its charm grows the more one knows it.

New York loves the immense. Its foremost building—one which generations to come will count among the great monuments of all ages—is 792 feet 1 inch high. Please do not overlook the one inch. London will not permit private houses or offices to be more than a hundred feet high. New York's main railroad depots are palaces of marble, titanic in size, and more splendid than the palaces of ancient Kings. Charing Cross, London, the gateway of the world, is a modest, unassuming, and comparatively small building. New York, having completed a hotel of 2,200 rooms, now contemplates another with 2,500. The costliest hotel in London, in which five Kings and ruling Princes once lived apart from each other at the same time, boasts less than 300 rooms.

Each capital has its own special problems. That of London is inherited destitution, the existence of a large class born in poverty, bred with the aid of charity, marrying on nothing, living in slums and with little hope, save in exceptional cases, of emerging. The war has done more to galvanize the very poor of London into new life and give them new hope than have five hundred years of charity. The large areas of very poor in London have for generations repelled the friendly stranger, appalled the sympathetic, overwhelmed the social reformer. If war has brought them betterment the war will in the end be London's gain, not London's loss.

New York presents no such spectacle. I have walked through miles of east side streets in the Summer of 1919, and have not yet seen a really ragged or hungry child. I do not say that they do not exist, but I have not yet found them, and I am accustomed to hunt out poverty in its lair. You can, if you will, find one picturesque beggar woman on the stone

Real New England Clam Chowder—try it at my expense

DID you ever sit down to a helpin' of New England Clam Chowder? Have you ever dipped your spoon into that cherished dish of the Down-East seacoast housewife—genuine New England Chowder—the real thing?

"Reference—None" is the standard I have set for my goods. Anything we send you must match up to this in your estimation—or it will cost you nothing.

Of all the right-down satisfyin', appetizin' dishes, "born-an-raised" in New England, there's none quite as good as our home-kind of Clam Chowder. It's as different from the imitations served most everywhere for Chowder as a genuine dollar is different from a counterfeit one—it's the Simon-Pure article!

In makin' Chowder, just like makin' anything else good, you've got to start right. Good clams are necessary to good Chowder. And by good clams I mean those that are clean, fat, full-flavored and wholesome. The clams that go into my Chowder are taken from the sea-washed sands of beaches far from the dirt-defiled flats near big cities. I wish you could see 'em when the diggers bring 'em in—the shells white as chalk and as clean as a baby's cheek! And they open plump, full of rich juice, all salty-sea flavored, ready for the Chowder.

Tell you just how it's made? I could tell you, but you couldn't make Chowder just as we do here at Gloucester. I could tell you with what care it's prepared, and name each ingredient that goes into it, but I couldn't teach you the "touch," the Gloucester "natural gift," for preparing sea-food. Gloucester folks have been doin' it ever since the Puritans landed.

What I want you to do is just to taste my Chowder. But you say you never eat it. That's because you haven't had the real thing. I won't ask you to pay a cent for the Chowder—if you don't say my New England Chowder is altogether different, is better, than any dish of its kind you have ever tasted in your life.

So you can fill in the coupon below with full confidence; you can know in advance that the transaction will be satisfactory. I will send, carriage prepaid east of Kansas, a box containing 12 cans of Davis Real Gloucester Clam Chowder, each can sufficient for 4 people. This makes provision for a most agreeable change in your menu from time to time. Just consider its economy! It's so handy to have in the house, too. But not until you have tried my Chowder, and are more than satisfied with it, do you return the purchase price.

Like all my other fish products now being sold and delivered direct by parcel post and express to 100,000 American families (I've been in business 33 years) I guarantee my Chowder. In order to get and hold your trade I must make it convenient for you to deal with me, and I must give you better fish than you can get elsewhere. I never sell to dealers.

When we send your trial order we will also send one of our new Sea-Food Cook Books, telling how Gloucester folks cook fish in the home way. Included in the box, too, you will find a sample package of Lobster Sandwich Filling, gratis, so that you may get a taste of one of the many products we prepare, all of which are listed in the circular accompanying it. After all, there isn't any food more economical, more satisfying, or more nutritious than good fish. It's a case of knowing how and where to get the good kind, however. You can open an account with me just as you do at your grocer's or butcher's. But before it slips your mind clip and mail the coupon below with your business card, letter head, or reference. That's right—do it now.

Triumph of Draft Horses Over Gasoline Foe

On Farms and in City Streets, Except for Long Fast Hauls, Animals Are Holding Their Own and Winning Increased Favor

By E. L. D. SEYMOUR.

Draft Horses in the Making—Well Bred Colts "Roughing It" on the Pasture of a Western Farm.

DEVELOPMENT of the American farm has been dependent, and its continued prosperity will be dependent largely, upon the utilization of two main sources of motive power—that represented by the tractor and various types of motor vehicle and that represented by the horse. Recent years have witnessed a remarkable development and improvement of the former, accompanied by a tremendous increase in amount and use of that kind of power. But an even more interesting fact is that the horse has continued and is continining as one of the essential factors in farming; that it is maintaining in the face of gasoline competition its long-time position as one of man's greatest and most useful servants.

The basis for that statement is not sentiment, but fact.

In continuing and even increasing his productive capacity to meet the present contingency the farmer's problem is naturally to determine which of the available sources of power can give him the greatest and most economical aid, and then to make the most of it. Were he, in doing this, to follow the advice of one school of enthusiasts he would cast away everything but the farm tractor, and with that make his way to inevitable success and the production of abundant food supplies for the multitude. Another group exhorts him with equal urgency to discard all iron steeds and stick to the good old, hay-fed, four-footed power plant—the horse.

Probably, as usual, the safest course is a middle ground, suggested by the larger number of careful thinkers and observers, in which the two types of power are combined so that each can be applied to the work or phases of the work for which it is best adapted. Granting this as a general principle, it still remains true that in a large part of the world's farming the horse is just as important, just as essential, as ever; that more horses are needed on the farms of this country as well as on those of Europe; that aside from their mechanical value, heavy horses as a breeding proposition represent an investment in which more farmers can well afford to put their time, money, and ability.

These statements need not be taken on faith. There are statistics and generally known facts which support them. For example, were it true that the tractor and the auto truck were rapidly taking the place of the horse on our farms, we would expect to see a decline in the number of horses used and produced approximately in proportion to the increase in the number of power vehicles. And, this cannot be found. Moreover, while there has been a gradual decrease in the number of horses used in large cities, this is made up to a great extent of the reduction in the use of light horses—cab horses, private coaches, and light driving rigs—which has been very marked during the last ten or a dozen years; and that the decrease in heavy horses has been relatively small. Again, it stands to reason that horses are not produced unless there is a demand and a market for them. That they are being raised is clearly shown by the following figures:

1912	20,500,000	34,828	11,500
1914	20,062,000	22,776	15,000
1915	21,105,000	280,340	21,000
1916	21,150,000	357,553	29,670
1917	21,210,000	278,674	82,670
1918	21,555,000	84,765	132,000
1919	21,534,000	*10,991	†314,036

[b]Six months. †Manufacturers' forecasts.

This table shows a gradual increase in the number of horses on farms during the last seven years, despite the marvelous improvement in motor vehicle refinement and production. The increase has gone on notwithstanding the great increase in the number of farm tractors built for the express purpose of taking the place of the farm horse. And, in the third place, the numbers each year have been sufficient to not only make up for export shipments without precedent in our history, but also show a net gain as well in nearly every case. The export data, it should be remembered, do not include the horses sent abroad as part of the American Expeditionary Forces, nor the several hundred thousand mules sent across for army use, which also represent part of the "horse power equipment" of the country.

As to the demand for horses, it is even more active than it may appear to the casual observer. In the larger cities, which we tend to think of as becoming "horseless," the draft horse, especially in the larger sizes, is still an important factor. Through interviews with horse dealers and transportation companies in New York and Chicago, an investigator recently learned that while automobile trucks are being used extensively, they are proving economical only, or at least mainly, for making long distance, quick hauls—the sort of work that results in trips averaging at least fifty miles a day. For short distance drayage and transfer work along docks, in railroad terminals, and amid congested, slow-moving traffic—in performing which a team makes perhaps ten miles a day all told—there seems no question that horses are economically essential. We find similar conditions among rural surroundings in the case of small farms in which the size of the fields, the short hauls, and the frequent changes from one type of work to another do not justify or permit the use of a tractor.

As to the actual decrease in the number of horses in cities, the New York City Department of Health stable census shows that there were in New York in November, 1914, 110,144 horses; in March, 1917, there were 108,036, showing a decrease of less than 2 per cent. In March, 1919, there were 75,740, a further decrease of about 20 per cent. But again recall that this takes account of the many pleasure horses, both saddlers and drivers, and the turnouts formerly kept in private stables but no longer fashionable. Also war conditions had their effect on the transfer work in cities as upon everything else.

The City of Chicago, which licenses all vehicles, shows the following figures:

1-horse	35,600	32,750	27,627	22,778
2-horse	13,774	13,488	11,750	9,565
3-horse	207	212	230	203
4-horse	11	11	9	8
P. c. of decrease	..	6.5	16	17
Pass. autos	..	..	58,486	59,965
Auto del. wagons and trucks, 1 ton or under	4,887	7,738	9,472	9,853
P. c. of increase	..	58	21	5.5
Auto trucks over 1 ton capacity	2,517	3,792	5,423	6,648
P. c. of increase	..	50	43	22.5

Here, too, the rate of decrease in the number of horses does not suggest their total substitution by gasoline-driven traction power at an early date, and it should be noted that the falling off in the number of vehicles (which does not, of course, indicate the total number of horses employed) is smaller and slower in the case of the larger types which require the large, heavy animals of the true draft type.

The demand for horses on the farms of the country is far more pronounced than in cities of any size. "The demand for draft horses on our farms," said one authority in The Breeders' Gazette, "is increasing at a phenomenal rate. Argument to convince an intelligent farmer of the advantage of using heavy horses is no longer needed. He knows it. Farm sales reflect the situation. Roomy, drafty mares—grades—standing from 16 to 16.2 hands and weighing 1,600 pounds or over will, if of reasonable age, command $500 to $600 per pair at almost any farm sale, and there are never enough of this sort to satisfy the clamorous demands of hard-headed farmers who want good teams."

From the farm standpoint the superiority of the horse to any other motive power rests in its greater flexibility and versatility. It is adapted to a greater variety of tasks, and it will also meet the requirements of any one of many kinds of work under a greater variety of conditions. Its "horse sense," its ability to grasp and respond to the wish of its driver, and even to solve certain problems on its own account if need be, gives it a value that can never be attained by mechanical apparatus.

In the second place, as already suggested, possession of a good mare of the draft type represents the ownership not only of a valuable farm machine, but of a fundamental factor in a profitable breeding industry. Such a mare will produce under normal circumstances a colt a year, which will be worth more than the value of the time she is rendered incapable of work about the farm. The essential thing in connection with small scale horse production is that the animals raised shall be better than the present average. There are too many

Testing the Nation's Marksmanship

Every State and the Dependencies Will be Represented in Greatest Rifle Tournament Ever Held in This Country—If You Can't Shoot, You Can Learn Free

Section of the Line of Targets as They Appear to the Rifleman.

CALDWELL, N. J., will become the Mecca tomorrow of the man with the rifle. The biggest national marksmen's contest ever held in the United States is to be staged there. Americans will foregather in force to vindicate the reputation of their sharpshooting forebears.

It is due chiefly to Lieut. Col. William C. Harllee of the Marine Corps that the match is to be held. Colonel Harllee for many years has been a strong advocate of the theory that every person should be familiar with the handling of a gun. His theory is not based on preparedness or military training, but on safety. He thinks it as much a man's business to know how to shoot as how to swim.

Colonel Harllee chose Caldwell, N. J., as the site for the national rifle matches because it was near the large masses of metropolitan population, whereas earlier matches had been held on the various national ranges, none of which could boast a surrounding community to compare in size with this one; and because there was a navy rifle range already in existence which could be enlarged to meet the requirements of the mammoth match.

The hills behind the targets at Caldwell form a natural wall to stop the course of bullets. The range itself is flat and wide. Today the 250 targets, the various exhibits, the airdrome, the hostess houses, stretching out in a long row, give proof of Colonel Harllee's confidence in his judgment. This is the sixteenth range built under his supervision. It is the largest in the country, and, in his opinion, the largest in the world.

Just as soon as plans for the staging of the matches were started Secretary Daniels of the navy sent out a letter to Governors of all the States apprising them of the fact. Similar letters were sent out by the men in charge of construction of the range. The response was far greater than ever before. Every State sent word that it would send full representation. News came from the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands that they were to be counted upon to make an appearance. The Philippine team arrived late in July. According to a member of the Welcoming Committee, their prowess as marksmen is in inverse proportion to their English linguistic abilities, which is a warning to the State teams to stand to their colors. Another team that will be watched with unusual interest is from Hawaii. Their orchestra will be an added feature of the entertainment.

Another group which will arouse interest and enthusiasm is the A. E. F. team, just ripe from honors gained in the interallied rifle tournament held on d'Avours range, Le Mans, France. In competition with teams from Canada, France, Belgium, Italy, Rumania, Portugal, and Greece, the Americans not only captured first place in the team match, but annexed the first eighteen positions in the individual championships. Twenty-one of the first twenty-five competitors were Americans; two Canadians, a Frenchman, and a Belgian were the only others to attain a place.

The A. E. F. coaches equipped the Rumanians with Springfields and coached them to a victory over Italy, the little nation's greatest rival. Out of gratitude the Rumanians presented to the American team Captain, Colonel George Shaw, a huge silver cup, to be shot for annually by A. E. F. veterans.

Colonel Shaw remained in France to compete in a tournament staged by Le Société de Tir de France, an organization corresponding to the American National Rifle Association. He is expected at Caldwell about Aug. 10.

A match of special interest at the meet this year will be the international small-bore rifle match between the English and American teams. Five years ago American small-bore riflemen, pitted against the best marksmen of England and Australia, won the International Small-Bore Trophy. In the absence of further competition the prize since then has remained on this side of the water. When the English heard that a small-bore tournament was being staged this year, they sent a challenge, and it was accepted.

Contrary to popular belief, twenty Englishmen will not come over to the Caldwell range, nor will twenty Americans go over to the British range. The two teams will shoot on their respective ranges. That is, on the day scheduled for the match an English team will line up at one of the ranges in England with an American acting as one of the judges. Similarly, an English rifle shot will act as judge at the marksmanship records made at the range at Caldwell. The results of the shooting will be cabled across, and the team having made the highest record will get the cup.

The matches will continue until Sept. 1. For the first half of the month, however, there will be no meets between the national teams. The range will be open for practice work, and matches held among the teams of the National Rifle Association. The membership is country-wide, and the moonshiner from the South is expected to show the mountain ranger from the West what he knows about a gun. There are at the present time at the range something like 3,000,000 rounds of shot, all of which are expected to be used up before the month is over.

Of special interest to the citizen who has never shouldered a gun, or who has done it in amateurish manner, is the fact that the range is open to him on all the days of the match, and that a private coach will be provided if he makes application at headquarters. The aim of the men in charge of the meet is to familiarise the men and women of America with the pleasure and use of handling firearms. The rifles and the ammunition will be provided at the range free of cost. Living expenses are low, arrangements having been made to feed men on as low a basis as 75 cents a day.

The national match proper will include the national team match, the national individual match, and the national pistol match.

The national team match is perhaps the most important. This is open to teams of twelve men. The teams are picked from the following organizations: The United States Army, the United States Marine Corps, the United States Military Academy, the United States Naval Academy, the National Guard, in-

He Was the Owner of a Big Business

He started as an errand boy. He had the grip of a bull dog. Give him a job to do and he stuck to it. Nothing could possibly shake him off. He loved his work.

He grew rich.

He moved from a crowded city street to the suburbs. He bought a car and hired a chauffeur. He was too busy to drive himself. He was too busy to play golf. He was too busy to go to the theatre.

Sometimes he was even too busy to eat.

His friends advised him to ease up. His reply was always —"Next month or next year."

But next month or next year never came.

Then came the crash!

A sudden breakdown—a forced vacation of two months —weeks at a sanatorium.

He had been too busy to take care of his health.

You can't cheat Nature.

Your body is a wonderful machine—marvelous in its possibilities.

It will stand years of over-work and neglect:—yes, and do it without seeming to complain.

But there is always a limit.

Think of the men who have broken down before their time—and beyond repair!

A thorough physical survey would have revealed their need for immediate medical attention and, by coming under the care of their physicians before it was too late, many cherished and necessary lives would have been saved.

Don't wait for the bridge to break down before you repair it. Don't wait until you get sick before you try to get well. It is easier to keep well than to get well.

Go at it sensibly.

Take a yearly inventory of your health just as you take account of your business stock. Learn your health assets—understand your health liabilities. Be fit! Not 50% fit or 60% fit but 100% fit.

The question is "Where can I get a thorough physical examination at a price within my means?"

At the Life Extension Institute.

The Life Extension Institute has examined more than 100,000 men, women and children. In this vast number many lives have been saved—much illness, suffering and poverty prevented.

Ex-President William Howard Taft is Chairman of the Board of Directors. Other officers and directors are Prof. Irving Fisher, Chairman Hygiene Reference Board; Maj.-Gen. William C. Gorgas, Consultant in Sanitation; Eugene Lyman Fisk, M. D., Medical Director; Harold A. Ley, President; James D. Lennehan, Secretary; Robert W. de Forest, Vice-President American Red Cross; Arthur W. Eaton, President Eaton, Crane & Pike Co.; Edward L. Pierce, President Solvay Process Company; Henry H. Bowman, President Springfield National Bank.

The Life Extension Institute was founded for the public good. Its work is national. In addition to the Head Office staff, the Institute has more than 6,000 examining physicians located in the principal cities of the United States and Canada. The members of its Hygiene Reference Board serve without compensation. Two-thirds of the profits are set aside in a trust fund for health work of a national scope. The Life Extension Institute works hand-in-hand with the highest ideals of modern scientific medicine.

There is hardly a man or woman reading this message today who doesn't realize the value of a thorough physical examination or who hasn't decided, at sometime or other, to get it.

We do not wish to frighten you. But don't put it off too long. Every day counts.

The Head Office of the Institute is conveniently located here in New York. A thorough physical examination will not take more than an hour or an hour and a half of your time. We tell you frankly it is about the best investment you can possibly make.

A coupon is printed below for the convenience of men and women desiring full information regarding the Life Extension Institute—the good it has done—a list of its officers, etc.

New Acquisitions at the Metropolitan Museum

Art at Home and Abroad

DURING the last two years, while the war was raging, many works of art changed hands, and both public and private collections in this country have been augmented by acquisitions of great interest and value. Often the minor things, from the salesroom point of view, have a livelier interest for the contemporary public than others whose importance depends in part upon their antiquity and the difficulty of getting hold of them. In Gallery 25 of the Metropolitan Museum is an exhibition of the drawings bought in London during the war and only recently received. Part of them came from the Pembroke collection, which was sold in London in 1917. It was formed in the eighteenth century and was one of the famous collections, including drawings of the Italian school that have enlisted the attention of experts by their masterly quality. There is also a fine sketch by Dürer from the Poynter collection, with an ancient pedigree and much authority of style.

These drawings have earned consideration which they cannot fail to receive, but the exhibition placed on the walls for the Summer months contains items of less celebrity, that nevertheless make an agreeable appeal to the casual visitor, and awaken associations that go back not quite beyond living memories, and seem therefore still quick not only with aesthetic but actual life.

The drawing by Fantin-Latour, for example, in charcoal on paper, glazed and scumbled with oil color and varnished, worked up to a fullness of realization characteristic of Fantin's scrupulous preliminaries—it is a composition that holds in its competent grasp any number of suggestions thrilling to those at all familiar with the history of nineteenth century art. It is a study for the painting in the Luxembourg Museum, "An Atelier at Batignolles," and shows Manet painting the portrait of Astruc the poet, surrounded by Renoir, Monet, Bazille and others; one of those group portraits the initial idea for which came to Fantin from the Dutch seventeenth century masters, and which he executed with a technique not less painstaking and effective than theirs, although transmuted by his personal talent into a French idiom of expression. The association of Fantin with his comrades in art, both in Paris, when he was pursuing his passionate investigations into the methods of the masters at the Louvre, and later in London, whither he went drawn by the charm of Whistler, was peculiarly close and amiable. In his letters he discloses the ardor of his beautifully modulated nature, so adequately expressed by the manner he developed in painting. In both letters and painting he discloses also his bent toward the rendering of homage, the most beautiful and least appreciated trait in human nature. His portrait groups bringing together the young soaring minds of his environment; his series of lithographs illustrating the works of musicians whose sovereign genius he felt was neglected and ignored in France, these speak of a characteristic that differentiated him spiritually from his companions as his patiently perfected technical method with its debt to the great painters of the past, and its independence of them, differentiated him artistically from all the other young painters of his time. The drawing in the present collection is almost exactly the same in composition as the painting at the Luxembourg. In the latter the man in the tall hat at the left of the group in the drawing is replaced by a statuette of Minerva, but the other changes are slight, and show that the artist had arrived practically at his final arrangement, probably proceeding at once to the painting.

The beautiful drawing by Albert Moore takes the mind back to the London of the sixties and seventies, with Whistler and Moore both doing "Harmonies" and "Variations," with "japoneries" affecting the whole group of artists, with Whistler's friends breakfasting from famous "blue-and-white." There is nothing of the Japanese, however, in this large classic figure delicately veiled with multitudinous transparent draperies. It indicates clearly enough the Greek quality in English women, a quality to which artists as diverse as Frederick Leighton and Frederick Walker, Whistler, and Sir Joshua Reynolds were sensitive. The large free gestures, the long limbs, the deep throats, the serene, wholesome aspect, all speak of it, and the draperies of the Elgin marbles are more harmonious with the type than the lines of modern costume. Léonce Bénédite wrote in the Gazette des Beaux Arts that Albert Moore was perhaps the first to develop that "elegant taste for antique things that blends so agreeably with the English character," but, of course, he was not. It was developed a century before, and in Moore's own century there were many claimants for this particular honor. Whistler's chalk drawings on brown paper include many Hellenic figures in thin clinging draperies that belong to the same family as this by Moore. Certain critics have found that Whistler carried on the inspiration first given by Moore and others and see only the slightest trace of such a relation.

It is hardly worth while to argue at this late date the question of whether Moore influenced Whistler or Whistler Moore. In these sensitive chalk drawings they were like each other while keeping the essentials of their individuality. Moore drew with a full modeling positive definition of form; Whistler with the subtler modeling of an outline that vanishes and disappears, of broken lights and interrupted shadows, an art that whispers where the other speaks aloud. Of Moore, the French critic, Theodore Duret, writes: "More than any other painter in England he followed the same standards as Whistler. Like him, he disdained the literary anecdotal or historic side of painting, and the merit of his works consisted above all in his color harmony and arrangements of line. He painted draped women, committed to no particular action and in attitudes calculated simply to give full value to the folds of the stuffs and to beauties of contour. Without going to the point of classic form his arrangements exhaled a sort of reminiscence of the antique." After all is said, however, a discerning observer confronted with one of Whistler's little Tanagra figures and one of Moore's would see in them more of difference than resemblance.

The drawing that best represents Whistler in the collection is "The Bead Stringers," one of the small pastel studies of the picturesque life in Venice which went hand in hand with the Venetian etchings. Looking at it in company with Fantin's heavy study of the "Atelier de Batignolles," with Meryon's "Clock Tower" and other firm statements of human and architectural facts, one is impressed anew by the extraordinary lightness of mind and hand, the extraordinary promptness of the artist's response to the things seen. Before it had had time to lose a vestige of its freshness and its momentary aspect Whistler had it fluttering in his gossamer net, scarcely imprisoned, yet secure forever.

Curiously enough the artist who comes nearest to Whistler in this spontaneous quality, so far as this limited exhibition is concerned, is D. Y. Cameron, of whose etchings it has been said that each piece was a deliberate, closely planned engraving betraying the arduous labor with which it had been wrought. In the lovely drawing of "The Courtyard: Blois," with its faint accents of yellow and rose and green, we discover no signs of labor. The scene blooms on the fragment of paper like a climbing rose on solid masonry. The wrought iron balcony of intricate and exquisite design, the steps, and windows, and little people—all are indicated with gayety and ardor and not a trace of surplusage. It is worth a visit to the gallery to see the "Grim Cameron" in this engaging mood.

It is amusing, also, to turn from this delicate and playful record of a charming place to the incisive outline portraits by Edgar Degas, which have in them the elements of caricature, so acutely is the essential observed and so completely is it isolated without the modifying influence of even the smallest detail merging the individual with the crowd. They differ from caricature, however, in the heroic restraint with which idiosyncrasy has been held to its place and not permitted to drop to the ridiculous or soar to the sublime. There hardly could be a figure more commonplace to the casual glance than this bearded Manet, his shoulders a little humped by his distorting labors, the features touched by a peasant heaviness that extended to his blunt dexterous fingers; the clothing worn carelessly, with neither picturesqueness nor elegance to discriminate it. It is difficult to see where the intense individuality of the figure comes in, but it is there, unmistakable and dominating, and the little sketch, thin of line and meagre of detail, affirms itself as the work of a master. No greater contrast can be imagined than the incisive line of Degas and the bland line of John Flaxman. Flaxman illustrating Dante is one of the curiosities of art. Flaxman and Aeschylus are certainly not less compatible. Yet the gentle English designs made for the fiery Italian and the stupendous Greek have seemed to fill the minds and hearts of multitudes of admirers. They are indomitably innocent and mild and in this, no doubt, lies the secret of their power over deeply initiated lovers of art.

Again by the oddest of juxtapositions a drawing by Beardsley for the Morte d'Arthur supports the Flaxmans, the keenest of little biting drawings that makes the incisiveness of Degas seem blunted unless you see that Degas works with line where Beardsley works with wire and that the line cuts cleaner and deeper than the wire. But it is a very beautiful Beardsley with everything of his charm.

A group of drawings by John Leech completes the impression of extreme variety in the work of the English group. The contrast between Moore and Leech is not much greater, however, than that between Whistler and John La Farge of the Americans. "The Strange Thing Little Kiosai Saw in the River" is free from any sign of the impact of Japan, yet the mind of the artist responded to the Japanese tradition as deeply and with as great refinement of appreciation as though it had been steeped for a lifetime in the Oriental atmosphere.

The Dutch School is represented by Jongkind with two drawings heightened by color, "Dutch Fishing Boats" and a "Landscape." The fresh delightful ouch and the clear harmonious style justify the title of "Hiroshigi of Europe" given to him by Meier-Graefe. Bonvin's "Woman Reading" is a beautiful drawing. There is a "Nightmare" by Goya; Winslow Homer and Albert Sterner are among the Americans; Edwin Abbey's "Dirge of the Three Queens" is a characteristic composition and Gainsborough is represented by "A Woodland Scene." In such a range there is no chance of dullness, and Summer visitors to New York should not miss their chance at entertainment at once so rich and so delicate.

cluding the Naval Militia; the State troops, (including the District of Columbia,) student teams from universities, colleges, and schools, teams from the Reserve Officers' Training Camps, and civilian teams. The Governors of the States and Territories and the commanding officers of Reserve Officers' Training Corps are authorized to designate a civilian or school team of seventeen members to receive transportation and subsistence to attend the small-arms firing school at the range in Caldwell from Aug. 4 to Aug. 30.

The civilians so designated, if they pay their own transportation and sleeping-car fare, will be reimbursed upon public vouchers by the quartermaster of the small-arms firing school. This will include the actual cost of the trip and sustenance at the rate of $1.50 per day while traveling from their point of departure to Caldwell. At the conclusion of the matches they will receive transportation and sleeping-car accommodations and subsistence at the same rate. While at the range, the men will have sleeping quarters and mess tickets.

The national trophy will go to the highest team representing the United States service, exclusive of the Military or the Naval Academy; the Hilton Trophy to the highest team representing the National Guard of the State troops; the Bronze Soldier of Marathon to the highest school team, including the Military and Naval Academies, and a fourth trophy to the highest civilian team. The national individual and national pistol matches are open to any citizen of the United States. In each of these competitions the twelve highest competitors will receive gold medals, the next twenty-four silver medals, and the next thirty-six bronze medals.

One of the features of the "side shows" will be exhibition flying in one and two seated planes by men who were in actual combat on the other side. A miniature French village 150 feet long has been built, over which the aviators will circle and show the spectators how direct bombing hits are made. Near the village there have been stationed various camouflaged equipments, presumably German, which the American aces will endeavor to demolish.

Another interesting exhibit will be the showing of twelve big tanks of six types which were used in the offensive overseas. The most imposing feature of all, however, will be the assemblage of every type of gun used by the United States, the Allies, and the Germans during the war. Men who were in service overseas will be attached to these ordnance stores and will explain their mechanism and use. The largest gun made by the United States War Department will be stationed at Mountain View. It is a sixteen-inch gun.

Various hostess houses and canteens have been put up to meet the needs of the crowds of people expected. According to Colonel Harllee, the men are prepared for an average daily attendance of 75,000. An open-air theatre seating 8,000 has been built in anticipation of the various vaudeville performances which will be offered the public free of cost. Another feature of popular interest is the installation of several trap-shooting ranges, where the public will again be accommodated without charge.

The United States Government is financing all this. Although the navy, through the Marine Corps, is responsible for staging the meet, every organization in the military service is taking an active interest in making this year's match the greatest ever held.

Collective Bargaining and the Closed Shop

What Recognition of the Union Means in Theory and in Practice—Approval of It Found Not to be Unanimous

By EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

A FEW days ago former President Taft urged recognition of trade unions; "not necessarily a contract with them, but a recognition of their value, and as an encouragement to assume responsibility as American citizens." No one objects to that sort of "recognition," and no union is satisfied with it. The trouble is that recognition of unions carries implications to unions which embarrass employers and friends of all meritorious workers. But reservation must be made of approval of that sort of recognition which causes schisms among unions and strengthens those who profess humanity and practice inhumanity.

Take the shipping strike as an example of the sort of recognition which raises practical difficulties of the closed ship or shop. The American Steamship Association and the United States Shipping Board, representing public and private owners and operators, are resisting that alien unionists shall have preference over American nonunionists. The preferential union was invented to pacify the demand for a strictly closed shop in the garment trades of this city some years ago, but it was not a success then any more than it is now. The trouble is that only about half the strikers are unionists, and about half of their members are aliens. No government can, and no private company should, give preference to aliens in matters which are the rights of all citizens. The American unionist strikers see the dilemma, and profess readiness to share preference with American nonunionists, but that antagonizes those who profess and practice preference for union membership rather than American citizenship as a qualification for work.

There is nothing theoretical about this. The argument is conducted with weapons, and blood has flowed in this strike, which is not yet settled. Spokesmen for the strikers say that employers are hiring thugs and strikebreakers to intimidate the unions. But it takes two to make a fight, and there are fewer wounded among the unionists than among those who would be more numerous were they allowed to earn their living without fighting pickets. The difficulty about recognizing the union, and closing the ships to nonunionists, is that it calls for the discharge of half the shipworkers, or for compulsion of them to join unions. That would give control over the employers by an objectionable sort of unionism, and would substitute union edicts for law respecting the universal right to work.

Another trial of strength of the same sort is impending in the steel trade.

The unions are now balloting on a strike in support of the unionization of the industry, which has shown capacity for almost unlimited production without unionism, and with better pay than the union scale. There have been no recent complaints of working conditions in the industry, and the wages are at the maximum, having been maintained or increased when even dividends were reduced. In fact, the richness of the wage prize motivates the attack on the corporation, which refuses to recognize the union to the extent of compulsion of workers to join it. Regrettable incidents have followed the intervention of union leaders in the steel industry. That is also true of the demand of the United Mine Workers, who for years carried on the demand for the closed shop and recognition of the union, and have not obtained it for reasons universally applicable. The history of the Anthracite Coal Commission appointed by President Roosevelt is instructive to those who would wish to take the amiable views of Mr. Taft.

In 1900 the coal workers had a fair grievance in nonrecognition of them by the operators. The miners justly asked collective bargaining, and it was refused by a policy of stolid ignoring of their demands which proved a boomerang to those who used it. In his "Organized Labor," John Mitchell says: "A circumstance of incalculable assistance to the mine workers was that a Presidential election was to take place on Nov. 5." On Oct. 20 the operators surrendered by posting a notice of concessions which pacified the strikers, but did not recognize the union. The arrangement was continued through 1901, but in 1902 occurred the great strike which caused losses of $100,000,000. The operators lost production of $46,000,000; the mineworkers lost $25,000,000 wages; the railways lost $28,000,000 freights. The losses of the coal users are not known exactly, but coal cost some of them $20 to $30 a ton, which figures are being whispered as a possibility this year.

Again the operators were stolid in their nonrecognition of the demands. They regretted their surrender to the financial and political powers which had compelled them to take a humiliating attitude toward their workers, and they misjudged that the steel strike of that year would alienate public sympathy with the coal strikers. But the public sentiment was against the trusts of all sorts, and favored the unions because the operators rejected arbitration, and called for Federal troops to protect the mines. If the operators had understood labor problems as well as financial, they would not have been humiliated again by compulsion to accept arbitration, which went against them on all but recognition of the union. They saved that from the wreck, the award in 1903 granting more betterments of working conditions than the workers expected, and a fraction of which would have been preferred by them to their sufferings during their strike.

This history is recalled because of the reasons which the arbitrators gave against recognition of the union. The arbitrators were men of national reputation and authority, and their sympathy with unionism is approved by their findings. Certainly unionists have never had cause to reconsider their opinion of the arbitrators as expressed in acceptance of their arbitration. That award established collective bargaining, but barred recognition of the union, which has been a labor demand from that day to this. The award of 1903 was renewed for four three-year periods, and in 1916, after a "suspension of work," was renewed for four years by the concession of $9,000,000 added to the wage scale. But not yet has the union demand for recognition of it as a party to the industry contracts been conceded. In 1903 they were recognized as "an organization representing a majority of the mine workers." In 1909 the recognition was of "representatives of the anthracite mine workers." In 1912 the signatures were by the mine workers' "organization." Neither unionists nor nonunionists signed any of these agreements as such. The President of the United Mine Workers was not even allowed to write his official designation to his name when signing. There could not be a better example of collective bargaining and refusal of recognition. The improvement of the relations between labor and capital in this much disturbed industry has been marked. A report prepared for the Department of Labor (whole Number 1017) is the source of this history.

The reasoning of the arbitrators regarding collective bargaining without union recognition is important, as it relates to all labor disputes equally with this leading case. The operators have always professed willingness to allow their men to join a union or not to join. The shipping and steel employers now offer equality to unionists and non-unionists. The objection to recognition of the United Mine Workers as a party to an anthracite contract was that the union represented the entire coal industry, including a portion competitive with anthracite; that part of the membership was too youthful to be representative or judicious in action, and that the union was violent and unlawful in the conduct of its demands. On this point the award said that "the union's history is stained with a record of riot and bloodshed, culminating in three murders, unprovoked save by the fact that two of the victims were asserting their right to work, and another was performing his duty in attempting to preserve the peace. * * * In several instances the houses of such workmen were dynamited * * * and the lives of unoffending women and children put in jeopardy. * * * The practices which we are condemning would be outside the pale of civilized war * * * cruel and cowardly are not terms too severe by which to characterize it." And it continues:

Up a Tree

> The right to remain at work where others have ceased to work, or to engage anew in work which others have abandoned, is part of the personal liberty of a citizen that can never be surrendered, and every infringement thereof merits, and should receive, the stern denouncement of the law.
> The right thus to work cannot be made to depend upon the approval or disapproval of the personal character and conduct of those who claim to exercise this right. If this were otherwise than those who remain at work rightful if they were in the majority, have both the right and power to prevent others, who choose to cease to work, from so doing. This all seems too plain for argument. Common sense and common law alike denounce the conduct of those who interfere with this fundamental right of the citizen. The assertion of the right seems trite and commonplace, but that land is blessed where the maxims of liberty are commonplace. * * *
> No person shall be refused employment or in any way discriminated against on account of membership or non-membership in any labor organization, and there shall be no discrimination against, or interference with, any employe who is not a member of any labor organization by members of such organization.

The principle underlying this opinion is good for all time, as well as for all strikes. No advantage gained by unions for nonunionists in that manner can be called humane, so great is the disproportion between the numbers of unionists. Our strongest union, the Federation, numbers about 3,000,000 only. All unionists are less than one-tenth of population, and so small a proportion of workers as to put unionists in the position of claiming power for the minority over the large majority. That is not Bolshevism, for American unionists are not promoting a "new social order," like the British unionists, and the Socialists of all lands. Neither do the unionists admit a policy of "domination or downfall," or destruction of industry for their benefit. Unionists demanding privileges for unions claim to think that their policy is better for all, including their opponents. They are entitled to their opinion, and to press it by all fair means.

But the means of duress so often employed are at least in the Bolshevist manner, and cousin German to the German plea that necessity knows no law. In the Boston traction strike the Trustees formally announced: "No effort will be made to operate the cars with nonunion workers. It would not be safe to attempt it."

The Boston strike resembles many others in being a strike against the community, welfare rather than duress upon employers. This brings out the need of the people rather than of property or capitalists for protection. The Boston road is leased to the State under a contract which makes wages a matter of indifference to the owners and operators. The $4,000,000 wage increase has caused an increase of fares, which are paid by the riders. In this city the administration is opposing a fare increase, although wage increases have caused receiverships and deterioration of service. Testimony at Washington is to the effect that stoppage of service is to be feared. That would be a disaster to the community, submerging the gains to the strikers by duress upon the community. The strike of the Chicago firemen during the middle of the month was defiance of community welfare for gain by a comparative handful of men. The strike of the hands of the ferry operated by New York City was short, but it was made in a manner as distressing as possible, and nothing short of mutiny in an army.

There is no end to the list of such strikes. The argument is not that fair wages should not be paid. They must be paid if the properties are to be operated. But there is no presumption that wages enforced in such manners are fair; rather the contrary. The only manner in which it can be known what wages ought to be paid is that they should be enough to attract men to the work. The argument is parallel to the demonstration that underpayment of capital has driven it in other directions, and our railways are starved. Men like dollars, have a clear right to seek what pays them best. But when workers are driven away from work with weapons there is a demonstration that strikers are selling their labor above a fair market.

Unions presented at Versailles a declaration that it is contrary to humanity to quote labor like a commodity in the market. The conference modified the declaration of the principle to read that "labor is not merely a commodity," i. e., that it is a commodity and something more. That is an often-expressed declaration by our Supreme Court, and is one of the reasons why unions prefer their own laws about wages to the enacted statutes, which regard unionists and citizens with equal favor, and without privileges to either over the other.

"United we stand, divided we fall." The injury of one citizen is the concern of all citizens. Unions and strikers are not so similar that it is not necessary to distinguish between the good and the bad, as good and bad trusts are distinguished under the law which includes all trusts of both labor and capital. When "recognition" means domination by duress it is harmful alike to capital, labor, and the public. The public needs protection against the errors of both the others. Labor claims to excuse its errors because some capital errs. Neither capital nor labor can condone wrongful policies by like acts by the other. Capital has been brought under the law, but so long as labor defends its faults it will forfeit sympathy which might be commanded by confession and repentance. There is more tyranny inside some unions, and practiced by some unions against the public, than is practiced against them by nonunionists and Government together.

meeting the danger has already been proved impracticable. The English and the Americans are unwilling to maintain an army of occupation indefinitely and the others are not strong enough to count. It is true we are probably going to guarantee France against German aggression—but for how long? Under the circumstances it might be worth considering whether we cannot gain our ends without driving the Germans to an irreconcilable desire for vengeance.

After personal contact with all sorts of Germans in the trying period between the armistice and the presentation of the terms of peace, I am convinced that it would be a great mistake not to proceed with at least some of the proposed trials. The wisdom of placing the Kaiser on trial may be doubtful. He has been discredited as a ruler with the majority of Germans in his own country, I believe, but whether we like it or not—very few are convinced that he personally planned the war or that he was guilty of directing atrocities. There is therefore danger of winning sympathy for him where it does not now exist on the ground of alleged martyrdom, and, if by any chance—the technicalities of legal procedure or failure to secure corroborative evidence—a conviction was not had, it would be hailed as a vindication of Germany where it is least to be desired at the present—in Germany.

It may even be doubtful whether Hindenburg should be tried. He is the product of Prussian militarism, and he was the responsible head of the ravaging armies, but to the Germans he is just a plain soldier who did what he conceived to be his duty, obeying orders and carrying out the policies given to him. His appearance alone would convict him of almost any charge of cruelty by an American jury, but would it be good politics to make him an idol for the Germans by hanging or shooting him? Left alone, he will sink into insignificance in five years. It is different with Ludendorff, recognized as politician as well as soldier; with Mackensen, and with a host of others. Outside the Junker class I doubt that there would be mourning for the Crown Prince. But even as to these less popular commanders, there is danger of creating a conviction that they have been made victims because they were devoted to the "Fatherland."

There is one way in which these trials could be conducted so that they would not have this effect upon the German mind, and yet accomplish the object sought. Here we have a proposal to set up a court international in character and purpose. Why not make it really so? There are publicists of international reputation and established probity in the neutral countries whose presence among the judges selected for this trial would at once take away the idea, which undoubtedly exists in Germany, that this was a packed tribunal selected from the enemy with a preconceived determination to convict. In the Argentine Republic, in Holland, and in the Scandinavian countries there are such men, known as experts in international law and as men who would be unbiased in their consideration of questions of international law and principle. A verdict to which these men—or even some of them—would subscribe would be accepted by many Germans—possibly by the majority of them—as one whose fairness could not be questioned. Moreover, it would influence opinion among the neutrals, who may not otherwise be entirely convinced of the impartiality of the court. It would certainly look well in history and establish a good precedent for the future. Incidentally it probably would remove the opposition in the allied countries, which is likewise strengthening the resistance in Germany.

The World's Metropolis: New York or London?

steps of a Fifth Avenue church. She is an artist in her line. There are one or two other beggars scattered about. A few old men are to be found around the one-cent coffee stand outside the Tombs, or lounging on the seats in City Hall Park. But poverty is not the problem of New York. The problem here rather is to secure stability in local administration, to suppress concealed corruption in public affairs, and to assimilate the enormous number of foreigners who have made New York their home.

Italians and Syrians, Greeks and Poles, Slovenes, Galicians, Ruthenians, Russians, and Czechs, with the Jews from all these nations, form communities of their own here. Many of them never learn the American tongue. They have their own methods, their own churches, community houses, and revolutionary groups, they read their own newspapers, and cling to their own ideals. If ever New York City is caught in the new world revolt, it will be the unassimilated foreigners who will do it. In addition to this there is the problem of an older race, now taking more insistent form. New York has great and growing negro colonies. The old negro colonies, in Fifty-ninth Street and in Sixty-second-Sixty-sixth Streets, have a still bigger offshoot away up town, between 126th and 140th Streets, East, where there is a real negro city within a city. The war came to the negro as the message of a new era. He is awakening, as never before; whether for good or ill the next three years will show.

London still leads in population, but the difference is diminishing every year. Some statisticians, comparing Greater London with an imaginary area called metropolitan New York, assert that New York is now ahead. Metropolitan New York embraces all urban districts within ten miles of Greater New York. To make this comparison fair we would have to add the population for ten miles around Greater London to the British capital. Let us confine ourselves to the real areas of both places.

Sixty years ago, what is now Greater London numbered 3,000,000 people; the area of Greater New York numbered 1,000,000. The proportion was three to one. In the forty years that followed London doubled and New York trebled its population, making the proportion two to one. Fifteen years ago there were ten persons in New York for every seventeen in London. In 1911 there were eleven in New York to sixteen in London. Today there are four in New York to five in London.

I estimate that New York and London will tie in population in the year 1932, when each will have about 8,000,000 inhabitants, the twin wonder cities of the world. It is fair to assume that New York will continue to grow at her present rate. The growth of London will not be quite so fast as before the war, because of the heavy losses of population there. The only thing that is likely to put any check on the growth of New York is the congestion now prevailing. More trade is seeking to come to New York than New York can take. Waiting ships cannot find dock room, and there is no spare warehouse accommodation for cargoes. Houses are so scarce that landlords are in many cases raising rents 50 per cent. as leases come to an end. If the present tenants grumble, there are plenty more waiting. Men search for weeks for offices downtown without finding what they want. The value of land has reached an almost incredible figure, and this figure has been reflected in rents. Land around Wall Street has sold at the rate of $20,000,000 an acre.

So long as people are resolved to come in, they somehow make room for themselves, and with readjustments New York can accommodate many more. The time is coming when hotels in the region of Times Square and Forty-second Street will be turned into office buildings, and when the real social centre of New York will start at the Plaza and Columbus Avenue and go upward.

London has an advantage over New York as a shipping centre. It is a free port, where the goods of the world can be received to await their ultimate market.

Take, for example, the case of a merchant who wishes to dispatch a shipload of goods to Buenos Aires. There must be an assembling point for these goods. If he tries to assemble them in New York, he at once comes up against the stringent requirements of the customs. London encourages this trade. One ship from Kobe will bring silks, a ship from Cadiz wines, another from Philadelphia shoes or cottons. These loads can wait in the London docks until the ship from Buenos Aires is ready, with a minimum of trouble.

London as a free port has become the warehouse of the world. The merchants of Manhattan want New York to be the same. Great organizations are at work to induce Congress to establish a free zone. A prominent advocate of the plan admitted gloomily to me not long ago that one of the main obstacles was the difficulty of convincing politicians that no attack on protection was intended. They would think that a free port was in some ways connected with free trade!

Despite all drawbacks, New York is running a neck-and-neck race with London for shipping pre-eminence. Immediately before the war there was only a difference of 5 per cent. in the favor of London in the value of cargoes handled in the two ports, while the net registered tonnage of shipping entering and leaving New York much exceeded London. The British capital, unlike New York, only handles a small proportion of British export trade, not more than about 12 per cent.

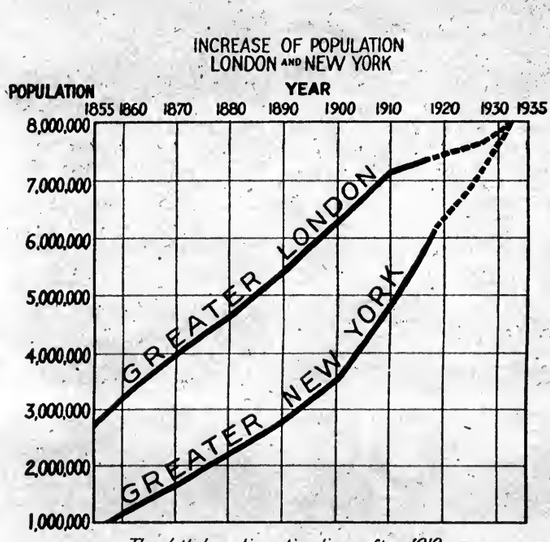

Chart Showing Growth of New York and London.

New York will soon have to share her world trade more and more with other ports. Her proportion is now declining all the time. Philadelphia today has all the freight she can handle. Boston will become a more and more powerful rival. The ports of the South will, in the near future, take much that comes to New York today. But American foreign trade is growing so fast that New York Port must grow with it. The only question is how far the authorities will make it possible for the growing trade to continue to centre here.

When the Secretary of the Treasury recently spoke of New York as the financial centre of the world, some people expressed astonishment. Before the war that was London's undisputed claim. London had the money, London had the credit, and London held the hidden wires that control world finance.

Today, while London still retains her machinery, she has to some extent lost the solid foundations of financial control. Gold currency still nominally exists in England. The man who presents a Treasury note for a pound at the counter of the Bank of England can demand a golden sovereign for it. But London's reserve of gold was largely dissipated during the war. London the debtor has today to pay heavy interest to New York, in place of receiving tribute. America, and in this connection America means New York, has added thirty billions to her capital since 1914, and will add much more in the year ahead.

London finance has been badly hit, but is recovering. London still has credit. Britain is one of the premier gold-producing nations of the world. London has still many creditors, despite her debts, allies, and dominions on whom she squandered money during the war.

Will New York be able to alter the current of world habit and change the financial centre from London to herself? Wall Street and the Treasury answer confidently, Yes. Lombard Street says little, but is stretching out afresh, is amalgamating rival interests, and is on the road to recovery.

It may be that the great fight for supremacy will be fought by New York and London in the world of higher finance. As New York centralizes the financial control of America, so London centres the financial interests of the British Empire and her dependents. But what I have seen of the financiers makes me believe that they never fight when they can amalgamate, and the future will see, even more than the past, the union and fusion of Wall Street and Lombard Street.

London and New York will reign as twin Queens, the one dominating in the East and the other in the West. They will find their ultimate ambitions in co-operation. Each has much to learn from the other. Each can aid the other. Between both there runs a feeling of friendship and alliance. They are in a sense rivals; they are in a fuller sense, allies.

Advantage of Neutral Judges for German Offenders

Would Allay the Feeling Among Germans and Among Some Critics Even in Allied Countries That Revenge, and Not Merely Justice, Is Sought

By CHARLES J. ROSEBAULT.

NOW has come the time of reckoning. For more than four years the world stood aghast at the exploitation of the Junker philosophies and felt itself impotent to prevent them. Then the world arose in an outburst of righteous wrath and cast down the brutes who had trampled upon right and justice in their attempt to enforce the discarded doctrine that right and might are interchangeable. Today they are preparing the world's court of justice which is to try the criminals.

The Kaiser, commander in chief of those who killed and deported, is to be the first to be brought to the bar. Ludendorf, Hindenburg, Mackensen, and a host of minor leaders—not to mention the Crown Prince—are on the list. Those who declared that the world could not endure if the crimes of these men were not fittingly punished see themselves about to be vindicated. The blood of the innocent is to be avenged. The brutality and the arrogance of the Junkers are about to be rebuked. If ever the world had cause to rejoice over the triumph of justice, it is now. And the fruits thereof are not alone for the present. In the far future Junkers will note and ponder.

Yet, if we are frank with ourselves, we must admit that the world is making a wry face. London, selected for the trial of the Kaiser, is far from happy over that fact. Voices of dissent—many of them too consequential to be ignored—are loud and persistent. In Parliament itself they are making themselves heard. So, too, in other countries which cannot be accused of pro-German sympathies—even in these United States, where the Kaiser and his fellow Junkers have certainly not been popular. Is it to be supposed that Americans or Englishmen object to punishing those whom they know to be responsible for the crimes of Belgium and Northern France or the countless murders of the U-boats? Or that they do not realize the necessity of making examples which shall be warnings to would-be Junkers for generations to come? There are other reasons, of course, which inspire the opposition.

Just before the armistice I met an American Colonel who re'ated the following: He had made a practice of trying to get at the thoughts and feelings of his men and had been particularly interested to know how they regarded American participation in the war. So, whenever the opportunity to get beneath the doughboy's crust seemed favorable he would ask this question: "Son, why are you in this war?" And Son would reply variously, according to his self-possession under the eyes of his commander, his ability to think independently and his wish to be frank. Some said, "To save the world for democracy." These the Colonel dismissed with an indulgent smile and asked them no more questions. Some said, "To lick the Huns," and these the Colonel remembered. But the boys who had wound themselves around the tendrils of his heart, and over whom he chuckled in the retelling, were those who said, with kindling eyes and snapping jaws, "Ter get ter Berlin." The Colonel had probed and analyzed this phrase after the manner of a pundit seeking the ultimate wisdom.

"What is in the back of the heads of those kids?" he demanded, and then went on to answer his question: "They see that the time has come to clean out the vipers, and to do that we've got to go to the place that breeds them. No little side issues for those boys, but just one steady drive for headquarters. No monkeying with little fellows, but grab the Kaiser. That suits me. Sometimes I dream of a big courtroom and Wilhelm on trial before a sort of international court-martial. And then there is a lot of so'emn music and a tremendous funeral parade, with the old scoundrel hanging in the Siegesallee and about fifty of his Junkers along with him. All done in legal, formal manner, you understand, and very impressive. I rather think that won'd put the Junker idea on the blink for a hundred years or so."

How many Americans—and Frenchmen and Englishmen, for that matter—dreamed similar dreams and felt that there never more could be justice upon this earth if their visions did not come true? Had the allied armies gone on to Berlin such an outcome would not have been improbable. But—there was an armistice instead and eight months have passed and much of the hot indignation of an outraged world has cooled. There is still a stern determination to bring the chief offenders to book, but to many has come a feeling that it will be better to proceed with an eye to the future. To the extent that punishment satisfies a strict sense of justice, and brings home to tyrants, big and small, a realization that the world means to hold them personally liable for their misdeeds, there can be no turning back; but the world is weary of unnecessary blood and strife. The call for vengeance is less strenuous than it was.

The feeling in many quarters is that the issues on which this war was fought were too big to have its glorious outcome weakened or smirched by any exhibition of small-mindedness on the part of the victors. Even too firm insistence upon strict justice may be an error, say these cool-blooded critics, for we must avoid even the appearance of unfairness. We must not forget that the modern theory of the treatment of criminals is based solely upon their future relations to society.

Well, here we have the problem of the future relations of the Junkers to international society, and this problem is complicated by the fact that their crimes must be established in the eyes of the whole world before we proceed to punishment, or else we face the danger of establishing a feeling of martyrdom in the whole German nation as to those whose guilt was not fully proved. And, say these critics, it is more important for the future peace of the world that Germany be convinced that the Allies have not been actuated by the spirit of vengeance than that some guilty ones escape.

I was in Germany when the proposal to try the Kaiser and his chief counselors was first made. It had not been altogether unexpected, and the Germans were so entirely occupied with the daily quest for enough food to keep them from starving that they had little thought or strength for other problems; yet they regarded this suggestion as only another evidence of the enemy's purpose to exact his pound of flesh. Even those who felt that their leaders had misled them, that they had been guilty of tyranny and brutality, and had conducted the war in disregard of the accepted rules of civilized warfare—and there were some Germans who did all that—thought that the Allies were animated only by the desire for vengeance and the wish to humiliate the German nation.

All through the war the world was talking of the impenetrable German psychology. The German's processes of reasoning were beyond the understanding of the outside world. Forty years of training in schools and barracks in the theory that the State could do no wrong; that it must be upheld even against father and mother, sister and brother, wife and children; that the individual counted for nought, had produced a logic beyond our comprehension. Those who did not accept it were regarded as rebels, to be repressed without mercy. The number of these has doubtless increased greatly since the logic was proved impotent to accomplish what it was designed for, but even they have not escaped its influence entirely. The whole German nation has been infected.

If the Germans were now to be blotted out, or to be held in perpetual bondage, it might be well to proceed with the proposed trials in utter defiance of their opinions; but we have decided to make peace with them and to accept them once more—after a probation, to be sure—in the family of civilized nations. It becomes a question, then, of doing what must be done with as little violence to the feelings of those in whom we see the possibility of conversion to honorable theories of conduct as may be.

Recently I met an Englishman who was prominent in propaganda for the Allies during the war. He was pronouncedly in favor of continuing an armed guardianship of the German nation indefinitely, for, he maintained, "you can't expect people with red blood in their veins to take the medicine we are giving them and not want revenge. They'll be bringing up their children with that idea for generations to come and we are going to have a worse war than this one if we don't keep the whip hand."

Maybe he was right, but his plan for

Betting on Horse Races, Then and Now

Following the Sport in New York Is Difficult, and the Odds Are Shorter Than in Old Days, but the System Is Little Changed—Advantages of Pari-Mutuel Method

BETTING on horse races is forbidden. In Kentucky and Maryland one may back one's choice by the pari-mutuel route, but not so in any other State. Elsewhere the sport of kings and the king of sports has been legislated out of existence.

That is to say, it has been legislated theoretically out of existence. Actually it has only been handicapped, to use a racecourse term. Actually the only consequence of prohibitive laws has been much the same as the prohibitive law against beer: it has resulted in a poorer product.

Betting at Jamaica, when the races were in progress there, and at the Empire City track later, has not been so different in method from the days of twenty-five years ago in New York, when betting was in its heyday. Presumably it will be so at Saratoga. The chief difference is that the bettor makes his own slip, the bookmaker declining to take the chance of recording a wager. Further, the present system requires a sublime credulity and an implicit faith in human nature.

In the old days the bettor did not make the slip, but neither did he receive any record of the wager. The bookmaker, who sat on a high stool, and held a slate on which were written the names of all the entries and the odds he offered against them for each position, entered in ink on a pad in front of him the badge number of the bettor, the amount of the wager and the odds.

Let us suppose that a man nowadays, a man not identified with racing, nor a follower of the "ponies," and therefore not acquainted with the sub rosa bookmakers hereabouts, fares forth to one of the tracks around New York with the intention of backing his judgment or his luck. In the betting shed he sees groups of men standing about the posts. They look like idlers. They have no slates, no pads, none of the paraphernalia of gambling. But if he approaches one of these men and offers to confide to his care a bank roll of $50 or $100, more or less, it will be accepted with alacrity. The stranger has opened an account. He is now in a way to bet all or any part, provided it is $2 or more, on the horse of his choice. In return for his money he receives some blank slips of paper.

No bets will be accepted in the betting shed. The law is specific and extremely verbose about accepting wagers in a stated place, and the "bookies" interpret that liberally to mean under cover anywhere. The bet must be placed in the open.

When accepting the bank roll, the bookmaker indicates a spot where he or one of the men idling with him can be found later. Just before the race begins the stranger finds one or more of the group at the appointed spot, and himself writes a slip, which he confides to the layer of odds.

If the bet is large enough to be of consequence, if the bettor wins, and is a stranger, he must wait in most cases until the next day to collect. He must then journey again to the track, find the man to whom he gave his slip, and ask for his money. As a rule, this patience and perseverance is rewarded. He collects.

But the consequence of this underhanded method of playing the races is that the man who plays gets much worse odds. The odds are, in the slang of the track, "greedy." They are "short."

The reason is not altogether to the bookmaker's discredit. In an elder day, when the whole field of starters was chalked on a slate or blackboard, and the bettor could see the odds against all the horses, the chances were that all the entries would get a play. Nowadays, when the word goes through the paddock or the lawn that certain horses are being backed practically all the betting concentrates on them. In a race with a dozen starters, for instance, not more than half a dozen will receive any play; only half will be backed to win or get the "place" or "show," and the consequence is that the restriction of the field, so far as the wagers are concerned, makes for a restriction of the betting odds.

Loud have been the wails of the players about the stinginess of the layers at racetracks around New York. Comparison has been made to their extreme disadvantage with the generosity of the odds paid by the pari-mutuels at Latonia and Churchill Downs. But an examination of the conditions brings forth some excuse for the bookmaker here.

The volume of betting is greatly decreased by the circumstances here, and this is another reason for less favorable odds. He who makes a wager violates the law, even though all possible technical precautions may be taken, and that acts as a deterrent. And many there be who would violate the law without compunction, when reasonably assured about the technical precautions, if the bookmakers were willing to take chances on any and all comers. But occasionally there have been men who could not, if they would, foist their bank rolls on any one of these enigmatic idlers about the posts in the betting shed. They have been known to try in vain to open an "account."

In town the precautions are even more rigorous, for of course you can lay a bet on the races in town, provided you haven't the opportunity to go out to the track. In town you must have a face-to-face acquaintance with the bookmaker, or must have an introduction from a sterling man-to-man acquaintance. The "books" are of two kinds. A few are said to be bold enough to maintain poolrooms, with direct wires, (telephone wires, for the most part, because the telegraph companies have suffered too severely at the hands of the law to relish these contracts,) over which the results of the races are flashed to a questioning and impatient clientele. Getting into these poolrooms is extremely difficult.

Most of the books in New York are handbooks. Let us consider the operation of an imaginary example: The layer of odds is in touch with employes in certain office buildings, janitors they may be, or elevator boys, or messengers, and for a percentage of the sums bet these men take custody of the amounts wagered by the men in that building, and turn them over to the bookmaker with slips showing who placed the money and what horse is to "carry" it.

The players in this case know nothing of what odds are to be offered against the horses they choose. As a rule, the bookmakers accept as authentic the betting odds published the following morning in a newspaper which devotes especial attention to sports. But some of them have arbitrary rules limiting the size of the odds they will lay, such as 20 to 1. There was the case; not long since, of three men who had united in a group to play the races daily for small sums. Among the acquaintances of these men it was known as "the pikers' pool." There came a day when but $3 remained in the bank. One dollar was bet on Gleipner, and was lost. Another was placed on Mountain Rose, and Mountain Rose also ran. The last dollar in the pikers' pool was placed on Crepuscule.

And Crepuscule won at 30 to 1!

But even while the three pikers were congratulating themselves there came a sad disillusion. The handbook maker would pay but 20 to 1. It was "house rules." The layer of odds was adamant. The three pikers were compelled to accept a piker return on their bet.

These handbook makers do not depend solely upon their touts and compradors in office buildings. At certain hours they may be found at certain places, in barrooms—for barrooms are still open, despite the law, just as betting is still maintained, despite the law—or in office building foyers, or in hotel lobbies. Their "clients" know where the bookmakers can be found, and place their money personally with verbal instructions. In such cases the betting actually is oral. And after the races are done, the bookmaker posts himself at a certain spot, and pays off such of the players as have won and are known to him personally. But as a rule he distributes the next morning, among his office building touts, plain manila envelopes containing the money intended for those whose judgment or luck has prevailed against gargantuan chance.

How different the pari-mutuel system! Pari-mutuel betting is legalized, and has the merit of eliminating the bookmaker, who has long been recognized as the chief evil of the racetrack, just as the saloonkeeper has long been recognized as the chief evil of the liquor traffic. It has been said that this country had no drink problem, only a saloon problem. In the same way, it may be said that the racetracks have no gambling problem, only a "bookie" problem.

Under the pari-mutuel system the racing association deducts a certain percentage of all money wagered to pay the expenses of operating and auditing the accounts of the machines. These machines, to the number, say, of a hundred, are ranged about the betting shed. A few accept bets of $50 to win, a few of $50 for the place, a few of $50 to show, (for third place.) There are machines in greater number to accept bets of $10, $5, and $2.

Nothing less than $2 can be placed on the pari-mutuel machines. That amount, or any multiple of it, may be placed on any horse. The bettor selects a machine accepting bets for the position he wishes to play, and receives printed slips for each bet. If, for instance, he wishes to play $6, he receives three slips. The same holds true on machines of larger denomination.

By an automatic device these machines register on blackboards the total amount bet on each horse at any moment. A prospective bettor may walk along the line and at a glance tell how the betting is going on any "pony" for any position. He can get an accurate estimate of the horses which rank high in public favor.

After the race is run, and the racing association's percentage for expenses has been deducted, the winning horses pay according to the amounts wagered. If, for instance, there remains $10,000 bet on the winner, while $50,000 has been bet on other entries to win, the winner pays five to one, and the odds are posted on a bulletin board in front of the grandstand.

The pari-mutuel system is the joy of the race fan. It pays by far the best odds, and manipulation is eliminated. There is no bookmaker to demand the lion's share of the money, however the race may go. All the money paid in, except for the racing association's expenses, goes to the winners. It is the system in effect at Churchill Downs and Latonia in Kentucky, at Pimlico and Havre de Grace in Maryland.

But everybody concedes that betting on the races in New York nowadays has no more punch to it than 2.75 beer.

Which Shall Remake Peace, Germany or Democracy?

III.

If the peoples who hold the democratic hope fail in this their hour of trial, if they fail to charge themselves with the radical remaking of the Peace of Paris, then Germany will make the new peace, and, after a time of chaos, eventually reorganize Europe. Her pattern is already prepared, and the weaving thereof will soon be proceeding.

She will not proceed in the open and directly. Her plans for procuring the new peace will be of the precise moral order of her preparations for war before August, 1914.

She will subsidize and intensively cultivate now, as she has hitherto subsidized and cultivated, every subversive or disintegrating movement throughout Europe, Asia, and Africa—and in America also. The Bolshevism which she fostered in Russia, and which keeps for Germany her Eastern gates, will be secretly spread abroad by her agencies. China, Afghanistan and India are examples of Bolshevist propaganda—resourced by Germany—which may permeate and persuade the entire Mohammedan world. Her policy now, as before, will be to ruin the wor'd in order to remake it according to the German pattern, to exploit and rule it according to the German mind.

This is in Germany's program, whether the peace be signed or not. But if America refuse to confirm the peace, thus practically nullifying the total work of the Paris Conference, then the German program will have the free course it could not have if the peace, imperfect as it is, were provisionally established.

IV.

But the chief agency which Germany will use for yet procuring a peace according to her liking is the official Socialist Movement.

In each of the allied countries, as well as in the Central Empires and in Russia, the majority of the Socialist parties continually sought, during the war, a peace measurably favorable to Germany. These parties were at once the refuge of the pacifist element in all nations and the focal places of German intrigue. In Germany itself, the Kaiser and the Government had no more consistent and faithful supporters than the Social-Democratic Party; without the support of this party Germany could not have begun or continued the war. In France, Socialist leaders like Jean Longuet and Marcel Cachin worked for a negotiated peace from the war's beginning; they also worked for the restoration of the old International—which was international only in name and altogether German in fact. In Italy, only in times of serious national crisis did the Socialist leaders render a nominal support to the prosecution of the war. In England the Independent Labor Party, officially in the ascendant and chiefly pacifist, plotted for a peace of compromise. The American Socialist Party was honestly and frankly pro-German.

Thus the rare leaders who were possessed of real statesmanship—such as the truly great Hyndman of England and Vandervelde of Belgium—were forced to stand forth against International Socialism in which they themselves had played so great a part. In America such men as Walling and Spargo, Bohn and Stokes, as well as the humble writer of these words, were compelled to withdraw from the Socialist Party.

V.

The German dominance is understandable enough. It was from Germany that political socialism came. From Germany came the great dogmatists of materialism, Marx and Engels; and they came so Prussianly as to impose themselves upon all political and labor movements making for radical and revolutionary change.

Socialism was not born in Germany, it is true, but in France, fathered by Saint-Simon and Fourier, and with much of the inspiration and purpose of primitive Christianity. But the French movement was first discredited and then seized upon by the German dogmatists; and, like every movement that has gone to Berlin, it underwent the Prussian debasement and took on the Prussian image. Hence International Socialism, so far as its official or recognized parties count, so far as its Marxian basis is concerned, has ever been Prussian in its mentality; and it has ever proceeded upon a program essentially an amplification of the Hegelian or Prussian state. Its claim to be socialist, its claim to be democratic, has been sheerest self-deception and a stupendous imposture upon international labor and radicalism.

Bismarck himself, even in his time, came to value and patronize the Social-Democratic Party of Germany as a means toward the accomplishment of his imperial capitalist ends. And, since the beginning of the war, the German Government has been able to use Socialist parties, in all the allied nations except Belgium, for the propaganda of Germanism. This is denied, of course, by the official leaders; but it is no less true—no less true that the negotiated peace which Socialist leaders either secretly or openly worked for has been a peace acceptable to Germany. And today all these parties are preparing for the remaking of a peace according to the German desire.

VI.

The Peace of Paris will have to be remade—this I have already declared—but it is of supreme importance to the human future that it shall be made by democracy and not by existing International Socialism—the socialism which has proved itself faithless and incompetent in both war and peace, and whose Marxian program, notwithstanding its revolutionary jargon, is patterned precisely upon the capitalist politic and the Prussian state.

Yet it is just this peril which is coming upon the world apace—the peril of a German peace procured, in the course of two or three years, through International Socialist agencies.

No other than a German peace can come out of the Socialist parties of the present. The Socialists of today believe in Germany; in German economic and political doctrine; in the efficiency of the German state; in the general superiority of the German Socialist mind and leadership. Thus any peace made by International Socialists, as their parties are now constituted, will be the handiwork of German believers—of men such as Troelstra of Holland; of Longuet and Cachin of France, of Henderson and MacDonald of England. Any peace made by these leaders will be, no matter what they say to the contrary, a German peace. It will professedly be a peace made upon the basis of international justice and good-will—and if it were such a peace in fact, then we could work for its coming and welcome its appearance. But it will be nothing of the kind; it will be a peace inspired and formed by the German mind—a peace formed unto the German conception of international justice and good-will; a peace made in Germany as well as for Germany. For just as the fetish and superstition of German authority and superiority is over International Socialism, so a conception of the inferiority and incapacity of all other nations is regnant in the minds of its German high priests. And this Germanized socialism, this Germanized internationalism, is Germany's first-chosen agency for still winning the war—if she has not already won it through the delinquent Peace of Paris.

No, the peace must not be remade by the International Socialism of today—socialism itself must be remade ere it can be trusted by the peoples. As certainly as the bankruptcy of sheer capitalism has been demonstrated by the war and the Paris Conference, so certainly has the intellectual incapacity and moral infidelity of existing International Socialism been demonstrated; the political and spiritual incompetence of its materialist philosophy and tactic are manifoldly manifest. Not unto such forces as these can the democratic hope and the new social creation be committed.

VII.

Another important if not equally powerful agency for yet procuring a German peace is Germany's organized economic penetration. This was incredibly universal before the war; it continued during the war; it proceeds now.

What we of the allied nations so fatally fail to realize is the fact that Germany is prepared to cope with even the most disastrous defeat, and with the most drastic peace based upon that defeat. She has long ago prepared for defeat—she is today preparing for defeat—as thoroughly as she was previously prepared for war. The machinery of her industry is unharmed, ready for operation the moment peace is signed. Her power for quick industrial recuperation is immeasurably greater than she has led us to believe or than we have foreseen. The gates of the East will be open to her, no matter what happens in Russia. Her commercial agents, who are always diplomatic agents also, are today active in Warsaw, in Moscow, in Teheran, in Kabul, in Peking; nor are they absent from France and Italy, from England and America. Along the crossways of Switzerland commercial intercourse between Germany and allied countries has been proceeding since the signing of the armistice. Great capitalist interests of the allied countries, as well as of Spain and Holland and Switzerland, though listed in other than German names, are really German property. German efficiency in this field of economic penetration and exploitation coupled with intrigue in the domestic affairs of all nations, is beyond anything within the range of our Anglo-Saxon perspicacity or practice. It is a fact we have ignored, but a fact we shall have to face and to challenge. It is a fact that may, if evaded and unchallenged, occultly transmute the allied victory into a German domination of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Germany counts upon this efficiency for the accomplishment of just this end.

VIII.

But we shall meet none of the ways or weapons of this new German menace by mere proclamation or suppression. The German commercial efficiency can be dealt with only by a more highly energized efficiency of our own. The peril that inheres in the German mind of International Socialism cannot be met by the attempted suppression of Socialist movements or leaders. It can only be met by openly and tolerantly debating, with both these and other leaders and movements, the whole international future.

In fine, the new and greater German peril, pregnant with possible German world-dominion, can be met only by a renascent and anointed democracy, arisen and resolute through all the nations that have been with Germany at war, co-operating with the incipient German democracy so highly championed by such men as Muehlon, Foerster and Schlieben—even by such as Bernstein and Haase.

IX.

So often, in the course of the war, and with little effect I fear, I tried to explain that the war would only begin when the war ended. The Great War is but a prelude to a greater war; and this greater war—the war between Germanism and democracy—now spreads its vaster and more fateful fields.

It is identical with the war between reactionary capitalism and democracy. For the reactionary capitalism of the allied nations, if it succeed not in the utter political destruction of Germany and the seizure of German industry and trade, will straightway ally itself with a counter-revolution in Germany, making the restored Prussian power its citadel. It is altogether to the interests of the international money-lenders, of the mobilized Ancient Appetites, to restore and preserve an autocratic Germany. Reactionary international capitalism will turn to this, in the end—in fact, is already revolving this program, already tentatively planning its fulfillment.

X.

Nor is Germanism the only menace democracy will have to discern and withstand. The forces of disintegration, all roughly bearing the name Bolshevism, will malifically assail the movements making for democratic reconstruction. Not only in the rear, but from every side, will Bolshevism seek to undermine the ground beneath the democratic advance. And all these disintegrating movements will, for the time being, work in alliance with Germany.

So thus beset by the forces making for the class autocracy of the Bolshevik—and each of these forces the deadly enemy of the truly socialized and democratic man—each the deadly enemy of freedom and the human soul, so thus encirclingly beset, must an emboldened and purified democracy go forth to conquer and create the new world for which all the baffled generations of men have waited, and for which the tribes and the nations now stretch forth worn and appealing hands.

But who, or what, is sufficient for these things? God knows, not I. But that both sufficiency and efficiency are embryon in our democracy, and that they are appointed to birth and to love's lordship of society—this I believe. I am beset, even in this darkest hour, with a great hope, not passive but active and vigilant, and sometimes ascending into ineffable faith, that out of this evil time will arise a world-citizenry, gifted with a wise and universal good-will, and altogether able for the creation of a noble and beautiful world-order.

I have glimpsed, I think, from my watch upon Europe's quaking walls an impending freedom and fraternity that would, if laid hold of, overpay the world for the war's worst woes. An earth wherein the nations choose righteousness for their portion, wherein they choose each other's good, and each of them replete with the peace and the progress which righteousness begets, this earth is at least—is at last—humanly possible.

Beyond this evil time, and in plain view, if our sight be cleansed for the vision, outspreads the Canaan of our ageless quest—that providential society, that immortal community of nations, that candor and equality of opportunity, that democracy and fraternity in the exercise of power, that beatification of all labor and all being, that common reverence for each soul and all service which the heart of the world desires and which the justice of love provides.

Stealing the Bolshevist Thunder

WE are used to being jarred these days. We have all had dreams of various kinds of millenniums, and we keep waking up and finding it's the same old world, with the same old gang of human beings trying to live in it. But yesterday I came upon the following, which seems one of the best presentations of Bolshevism—"the great new idea in the wor'd." I quote:

P.—I tell you that we are all to share alike and have everything in common, instead of one being rich and another poor, and one having hundreds of acres and another not enough to make him a grave, and one a houseful of servants and another not even a paltry footboy. I am going to introduce communism and universal equality.

B.—How communism?

P.—That's just what I was going to tell you. First of all, everybody's money and land and anything else he may possess will be made common property. Then we shall maintain you all out of the common stock, with due regard to economy and thrift.

B.—But how about those who have no land, but only money that they can hide?

P.—It will all go to the public purse. To keep anything back will be perjury.

B.—Perjury! Well, if you come to that, it was by perjury it was all acquired.

P.—And then, money won't be the least use to any one.

B.—Why not?

P.—Because nobody will be poor. Everybody will have everything he wants—bread, salt fish, barley cake, clothes, wine, garlands, chick-peas. So what will be the good of keeping anything back? Answer that, if you can?

B.—Isn't it just the people who have all these things that are the greatest thieves?

P.—No doubt, under the old laws. But now, when everything will be in common, what will be the good of keeping anything back?

B.—But what about the clothes? How are they to be provided?

P.—What you have now will do to begin with, and afterward we shall make them for you ourselves.

B.—Just one thing more! Supposing a man were to lose his suit in the courts, where are the damages to come from? It would not be fair to take the public funds.

P.—But there won't be any lawsuits at all!

B.—That will mean ruin to a good many people!

Bystander—Just my idea!

P.—Why should there be any?

B.—Why! For reasons enough, heaven knows! For instance, a man might repudiate his debts.

P.—In that case, where did the man who lent the money get it from? Clearly, since everything is in common, he must have stolen it!

B.—So he must! An excellent idea! But now tell me this. When fellows come to blows over their cups, where are the damages to come from?

P.—From the rations! A man won't be in such a hurry to make a row when his belly has to pay for it.

B.—One thing more! Will there be no more thieves?

P.—Why should any one steal what is his own?

B.—And won't one be robbed of one's cloak at night?

P.—Not if you sleep at home!

B.—Nor yet if one sleeps out, as one used to do?

P.—No, for there will be enough and to spare for all. And even if a thief does try to strip a man, he will give up his cloak of his own accord. What would be the good of fighting? He has only to go and get another, and better, from the public stores.

B.—And will there be no more gambling?

P.—What will there be to play for?

B.—And how about house accommodations?

P.—That will be the same for all. I tell you I am going to turn the whole city into one huge house, and break down all the partitions, so that every one may have free access to every one else.

Who wrote it? Lenin, Trotzky, or some of their satellites in this country, John Reed or Max Eastman? No, none of these, nor yet any of the modern satirists of their pet theories.

I have quoted exactly with only one omission.

The author of this skit on this brand-new thing in the world—the thing that's the logical carrying out of Karl Marx's ideas, &c.—the author is Aristophanes, and the play is the comedy of "Ecclesiasusae," or, as one should say "Congress-women."

Is there anything new?

horses on our farms that are liabilities rather than assets, whether considered as breeding stock or as work animals. This is indicated by the fact that while good mares, even though not purebreds, will, as mentioned above, bring $250 or more apiece without difficulty, the average value of the nearly 22,000,000 horses on American farms in January, 1919, was only $98.48. It costs little if any more to feed a good horse than a poor one; the better animal more than offsets any possible increased cost in the larger amount of better work it does; if used for breeding its value is accumulative with every generation; and, if registered, its progeny is given a higher status with a correspondingly higher value.

The problem is, therefore, to raise more and better horses of the draft type on our farms. There are several things that can be done toward this end. Fundamentally, the great army of horse users must be educated to a knowledge of what better horses are, to a desire for them, and to a willingness to discard everything below standard. This campaign is well under way and is being conducted by State and Federal Departments of Agriculture, agricultural colleges, county agents, and local, State, and national associations of breeders.

Then there must be a more general use of higher-class sires in the production of work horses both for the farm and for the city. This means primarily the use of purebred, registered stallions of the leading draft breeds. Of these there are four of real importance in the United States—the Percheron of French origin, the Belgian, developed in that brave little country, and the Clydesdale and Shire of Scottish and English descent, respectively. The first, which is the most numerous and most popular in this country at present, is remarkably active for its large size, varies from black to gray in color, and is characterized by fine bone and clean-cut legs, with short hair about the ankles. The Belgian is a shorter, rounder breed, but of great size and with an especially massive neck; in color it is invariably chestnut; in temperament it is quiet and docile. Both Clydesdale and Shire combine height and length of leg with their large size, and have characteristic long hair on their lower legs, which is soft and silky in the Clyde and rather coarser in the Shire. Both are strong, of more phlegmatic temperament than the Percheron, and vary from bay to brown, usually with white markings; there is practically always white on the face of a Shire.

Three of a Kind Is Better Than a Pair—They Enable One Man to Accomplish More. Purebred Percherons of the Right Type.

Good animals of these breeds are scattered throughout a number of States and are gradually increasing in number. It is highly desirable, however, that more of them be raised and that more sound, registered sires be made available for the use of farmers owning one or a few mares of no special breeding, but of good size and conformation, from which excellent work animals could be obtained. To this end it is being urged that States in which horse production is an important phase of farming adopt a subsidizing policy, which has proved highly satisfactory in France and Belgium for many years and which England and Canada have recently taken up.

The idea involved is that by contributing to the cost of keeping certain approved, purebred stallions the State will make it possible for more farmers or groups of farmers to own such animals, and keep them for breeding purposes where they can bring about the improvement in the horses of their localities. There is not only precedent in favor of the plan—the countries mentioned above having found it admirable—but there is also the argument that it will inevitably make for the greater efficiency of our farms, the greater prosperity of our farmers, the increased production of foodstuffs, and the benefiting of all the peoples of the earth who look to us to feed them, and who must not look in vain.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

IT is doubtful if any other newspaper ever sprang at once into such unique and unqualified success in every phase of a newspaper's existence as did The Stars and Stripes, the journal established and carried on by the American Army in France. It is now almost impossible to obtain complete files of the paper, but certain portions of it, written by Sergeant Alexander Woollcott, with reproductions of many of C. Leroy Baldridge's drawings, are to be published in book form in the late Summer by the Century Company under the title "The Command Is Forward." Sergeant Woollcott resigned his position as dramatic editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES in May, 1917, enlisted in the army, and was among the first 40,000 members of the A. E. F. in France. When The Stars and Stripes was established he was detailed to the duty of traveling along the front of our army and writing each week a chronicle of what he had seen for the benefit of the troops themselves. His articles, following the progress of the army from its first action until it settled down in Rhenish Prussia and the later work of the 23d Engineers in cleaning up the Argonne region, will be reprinted in "The Command Is Forward" just as they were written, except that the army organizations will now be identified by name and number.

A new book by Henri Barbusse, author of "Under Fire," is announced for early publication by E. P. Dutton & Co. It will be called "Light" and it will portray the enlightenment which comes to a typical French soldier of the working class who serves all through the war. Barbusse is said to bring out vividly the dawning aspirations of his soul against the background of the conflict.

General Ludandorff's book on the world war, which, presumably, will present a complete survey of the conflict from the German viewpoint, will be published in the United States by the Harpers in the early Fall.

Archibald Hurd and H. H. Bashford are the authors of "The Heroic Record of the British Navy," which Doubleday, Page & Co. will publish the middle of this week. It will tell the human side of the achievements of the British Navy during the war.

"Gabrielle of the Lagoon," to be published in August by the Lippincotts, will be the first novel of an author already known by several books of travel. He was a friend of Robert Louis Stevenson, whose love of the South Seas he shared. The scenes of his novel are said to be drawn from intimate acquaintance with those wide blue waters and tropic isles.

"Partners of the Out-Trail," by Harold Bindloss, the story of a young Canadian woodsman who is heir to a great English estate, will be published by the Stokes Company the latter part of this month.

The Scribners will have ready some time this month E. Alexander Powell's new book, "The Army Behind the Army," the story of the great numbers of men who enlisted, trained, and equipped the army that went across. Mr. Powers has been made a Knight of the Order of Leopold by King Albert of Belgium in recognition of his services to Belgium and of the value of his book, "Fighting in Flanders."

The John Lane Company will bring out in August Isaac F. Marcosson's new book, "Peace and Business," which embodies the results of his economic investigations in Europe during the war and since the signing of the armistice.

"Ireland's Fight for Freedom," by George Creel, which the Harpers announce for immediate publication, reviews the whole of Ireland's troubled history from the year 1169, when the Earl of Pembroke landed on Irish soil, until the present time, and insists that Ireland is no longer a problem for England alone, but one that concerns the entire world.

"The Romance of Aircraft," which the Stokes Company will publish early in August, has been written by L. Y. Smith and is described as telling the complete story of the conquest of the air from man's first crude efforts to the present time, with special attention to types used in the war and explanation of the principles involved in flying and of the problems which had to be solved.

The Macmillans will have ready shortly a volume of articles on "The Church and Its American Opportunity," edited by the Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery. Among the contributors are the Rev. Percy S. Grant, Professor Talcott Williams, Mrs. Vladimir G. Simkhovitch, the Rev. Howard Melish, and Professor H. C. Butler.

A Wife Too Many

Into the hotel lobby walked a beautiful woman and a distinguished man. Little indeed did the gay and gallant crowd know that around these heads there flew stories of terror—of murder—and treason— that on their entrance half a dozen detectives sprang up from different parts of the place.

Because of them the lights in the War Department in Washington blazed far into the night. With their fate was wound the tragedy of a broken marriage, of a fortune lost, of a nation betrayed.

It is a wonderful story, with the kind of mystery that you will sit up nights trying to fathom. It is just one of the stories fashioned by that master of mystery

CRAIG KENNEDY

(The American Sherlock Holmes)

ARTHUR B. REEVE

(The American Conan Doyle)

He is the detective genius of our age. He has taken science—science that stands for this age—and allied it to the mystery and romance of detective fiction. Even to the smallest detail, every bit of the plot is worked out scientifically. For nearly ten years America has been watching Craig Kennedy—marvelling at the strange, new, startling things that detective hero would unfold. Such plots—such suspense—with real, vivid people moving through the maelstrom of life! Frenchmen have mastered the art of terror stories. English writers have thrilled whole nations by their artful heroes. Russian ingenuity has fashioned wild tales of mystery. But all these seem old fashioned—out-of-date—beside the infinite variety—the weird excitement of Arthur B. Reeve's tales.

FREE—POE—10 Volumes

To those who send the coupon promptly we will give, FREE, a set of Edgar Allan Poe's works in 10 volumes.

When the police of New York failed to solve one of the most fearful murder mysteries of the time, Edgar Allan Poe—far off there in Paris—found the solution. The story is in these volumes.

He was a detective by instinct—he was a story-teller by divine inspiration. Before or since—no one has ever had his power to make your hair stand on end—to send chills up your back—to hold you in terror—horror! To read breathlessly—to try to guess the ending—to enjoy the perfect, flawless style—to feel the power of the master—that is what you can do in each and all of Poe's undying stories.

This is a wonderful combination. Here are two of the greatest writers of mystery and scientific detective stories. You can get the Reeve at a remarkably low price and the Poe FREE for a short time only. Sign and mail the coupon now. Send no money.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S BLESSED INTERVALS

President Wilson is quoted as saying: "There are blessed intervals when I forget, by one means or another, that I am President of the United States. One means by which I forget is to get a rattling good detective story, get after some imaginary offender and chase him all over."

COL. ROOSEVELT SAID: "I did a whole lot of reading. I particularly enjoyed half a dozen rattling good detective stories by Arthur B. Reeve—some of them were corkers."

SOMERSET MAUGHAM'S STORY OF A GENIUS

"The Moon and Sixpence" Handles Successfully a Difficult Theme—Compton Mackenzie's Continuation of "Sylvia Scarlett"

THE MOON AND SIXPENCE. By W. Somerset Maugham. George H. Doran Company.

WHEN that striking and terrible story "Of Human Bondage" appeared some three or four years ago, intelligent readers at once admitted that whether or not one liked his work, Somerset Maugham, the novelist, was a notable and original writer. This early impression will be deepened by his new book, "The Moon and Sixpence," the curiously named history of a curious and extremely unpleasant man, a man who was neither lovable nor especially intelligent, but who happened to be a genius. Now, tales of persons declared by their creators to be geniuses are by no means uncommon; but it is very uncommon indeed for the reader not to remain entirely skeptical regarding their extraordinary gifts. And here it is that Mr. Maugham scores, and scores heavily. He makes us believe that Charles Strickland really was a genius, a great painter whose pictures, though ignored and ridiculed during his lifetime, became treasures coveted by national galleries. We can believe, too, in his tardy development, a development so slow that not until he was a man of 40 did he break away from his old life and all his former ties in order to paint. But it is extremely difficult to credit the supposition that a man of his temperament and disposition could have passed for years as a commonplace and rather dull person. His ruthless behavior toward everything and everybody that threatened to thwart him or to hamper his art might very easily have begun only when the slowly growing creative instinct had developed so far as completely to dominate him; but of his ferocious and superfluous rudeness in the ordinary affairs of life one would expect to find at least some trace before the crisis came which ended his early history.

The story is told in the first person by a young writer who began by being a friend of Strickland's wife, and who presently happened to encounter Strickland at certain important and dramatic moments of his life in Paris. Of what happened later to that unpleasant genius, first in Marseilles and later in Tahiti, he learned from others who had known Strickland. The usual trouble with this particular method of narration is that the author yields to the temptation to let the supposed historian know altogether too much; Mr. Maugham, however, never permits his unnamed young narrator to be betrayed into showing even a moment's omniscience. He speculates about Strickland and about Strickland's thoughts and motives; he has two theories as to the behavior of Blanche Stroeve, and the reader is left to decide for himself which one of the two is correct—if either. No less clever is the leisurely way in which he builds up the atmosphere for his story, giving us, to begin with, a good idea of the sort of man through whose eyes we are to see Strickland and the outward, semi-public events of Strickland's life. For Mr. Maugham never attempts to show Strickland at work; it is through side glimpses, a word here and an incident there, that we learn something of that creative force within him which made him seem like one possessed of a devil; yet not a devil of evil, but rather "a primitive force that existed before good and ill."

When the narrator first meets the man whose history is here set down, Strickland is an ordinary stock broker, a married man living with his wife and two children in a flat in Westminster, and voted very dull by the literary and artistic set which his wife, who had "a real passion for reading," and though a lion-hunter, cared for the book as well as the author, contrived to gather around her. Then one day this apparently commonplace stock broker calmly deserted his family and went to Paris, not, as every one at first supposed, with "a young person in a city tea shop," but quite alone, and when questioned as to his reasons, announced that it was because he wanted to paint. Some years later he drifted to Tahiti; there he settled down with a native girl, and there he presently died one of the most horrible deaths imaginable; but not until he had "made a world and saw that it was good. Then in contempt and pride, he destroyed it." He is a powerful and impressive figure, a man who fascinates even while he repels. It is easy to understand the attraction he exercised over the writer, who studied him precisely as he might have studied some strange, half-human monster, to whom he "seemed to partake of those obscure forces of nature which the Greeks personified in shapes part human and part beast, the satyr and the faun."

Yet though it is Strickland who dominates the book and Strickland is a man unlike and apart from ordinary humanity, the novel produces a remarkable effect of reality, an effect due in great measure to the admirable drawing of the minor characters, Dirk Stroeve, who had "the passion of Romeo in the body of Sir Toby Belch," a man of a sweet and generous nature, with a critical discernment which enabled him to recognize Strickland's powers at a time when no one else considered his pictures anything but daubs, yet who went through life in the guise of a buffoon, so that his very agony had in it something ludicrous, is a portrait which alone would suffice to make the book a notable one. His wife, that outwardly placid woman, piques the reader's interest, and we would like to know more of Rose Waterford, who "looked upon life as an opportunity for writing novels," and whose small drawing room is the scene of some of the delicate and delightful comedy with which the book opens. How perfectly, too, do we "get" the admirable Mrs. Strickland, and her clergyman son whose talent for ignoring disagreeable facts "must surely lead him in the fullness of time to the highest dignities of the Church."

This is a book which has a great deal in it; Mr. Maugham digresses whenever he happens to feel like it, and his digressions never cause him to lose the reader's attention, but instead rather strengthen his hold on it. His comments are sometimes brilliant, always shrewd—often disconcertingly so. He has a way of getting beneath the surface and bringing to light what he finds there, putting forth his discoveries in a style which though clever is never permitted to become merely smart. He

By BRANDER MATTHEWS.

PATRIOTISM AND POPULAR EDUCATION. Thoughts and questionings on peace and many other matters of urgent national concern. By Henry Arthur Jones. Addressed to the Right Hon. H. A. L. Fisher, President of the Board of Education. London: Chapman & Hall, Ltd. 1919. 270 pages.

IT has been pointed out often enough—and by no one more often than by the present reviewer—that the drama of any language is likely to languish when the plays intended to be acted are unreadable and when the plays intended to be read are unactable. This was the condition of English literature half a century ago, when the dramatic poems which were published were seen on the stage rarely and never successfully, while the pieces which filled the theatres were never published, except in the so-called "acting editions," filled with cryptic stage directions and not designed for perusal.

A little more than fifty years ago Tom Robertson brought out "Caste" and "Ours," and he was followed in due season by W. S. Gilbert, who brought out "Charity" and "Engaged" and "Pygmalion and Galatea." The divorce between literature and the drama was annulled. The laws which governed international copyright and stageright were amended, and it became as profitable to write plays as it had been to write novels. So it was that, in the final decades of the nineteenth century, the trail blazed by Robertson and Gilbert was broadened and lengthened by Henry Arthur Jones, Arthur Pinero, Oscar Wilde, Bernard Shaw, and James M. Barrie, all of them men of the theatre who were also men of letters. Fair plays were written to be acted on the stage, and they were acted and acted successfully, but these plays were also written to be read in the study and they were read by thousands, many of whom had never acquired the habit of theatregoing.

Henry Arthur Jones is the most prolific of these practical playwrights who managed to achieve literature while acquiring popularity. Even in his earliest triumph in "The Silver King," essentially a melodrama, deriving its strength from its swift succession of startling situations, the dialogue had a straightforward directness and a masculine simplicity. In the first of his "Letters to an Old Playgoer," (contributed to The Pall Mall Gazette in 1882,) Matthew Arnold gave high praise to the style of "The Silver King," declaring that "in general throughout the piece the diction and the sentiments are natural; they have sobriety and propriety; they are literature."

No competent critic could fail to find a delightful literary quality in the "Liars," a masterpiece of constructive ingenuity, in which the men and women taking part in the intricate plot are human beings, who act and feel and talk like human beings. Brilliant as the "Liars" is, there are scenes of light comedy in "Mary Goes First" and in "Dolly Reforming Herself," perhaps even better than any single scene in the earlier play. When I saw "Mary Goes First" on the stage I wanted at once to read it at leisure in the study; and when I read "Dolly Reforming Herself" I wanted at once to see it acted—a delight as yet denied to me.

Mr. Jones not only contributed powerfully to the revival in our language of the drama which was both actable and readable, but he also took pleasure in calling attention to that revival and in discussing the conditions of its prosperity. It must be nearly a score of years ago that he sent forth a volume of lectures and essays which he entitled "The Renascence of the English Drama," and he followed this more than a decade later by another volume of lectures and essays which he entitled "The Foundations of a National Drama." And now in this lengthy epistle on "Patriotism and Popular Education" he reveals his disillusionment, he discloses his dismay that the renascence of the drama seems to him to have been short-lived; he cannot conceal his dissatisfaction that a national theatre has not been founded in Great Britain; and he cannot refrain a rather violent expression of his disgust at the degraded condition into which he sees the English stage descending.

It would be unfair to the author and to the readers of this review if the writer were to convey the impression that Mr. Jones's letter on "Patriotism and Popular Education" is devoted solely to a denunciation of the present situation of the London theatre. It is, of course, devoted also to the patriotism, as this is affected by popular education. But it is by no means limited to these three important topics. It touches incidentally upon a heterogeny of other themes as these have occurred to Mr. Jones's alert brain while he was engrossed in the labor of love which the indicting of this epistle obviously was. He seems to have had a lot of things on his mind, and to have seized this opportunity to "get them off his chest," if this familiar expression may be pardoned. As we turn the pages of his entertaining volume there arises before our eyes an image of its author standing upright on his own feet, with a repeating shotgun in his hand and blazing away at every abhorrent object that crosses his field of vision. And it is only fair to add that he is a keen-eyed marksman, and that he shatters not a few of the clay targets at which he points his fountain pen.

Mr. Jones is a clever man, far too clever not to know that he is peppering all sorts and conditions of men and all sorts and conditions of things. His sense of humor is too alert for him not to know what it is that he has done. And his sense of fairness is equally alert, so that he feels forced to warn the reader what to expect. The title quoted at the head of this review is that imprinted on the cover, and it tells us to expect thoughts and questionings on patriotism, on popular education, and on "many other matters of urgent national concern." This may seem fairly explicit in its promise of variety, but it needs to be accompanied and elucidated by the actual title page—perhaps the most ample and comprehensive of any yet printed in this hurried twentieth century, when titles of books are compressed in emulation with scareheads in newspapers. This explanatory title page deserves quotation in full, for it is honest, characteristic, and amusing. Here it is:

The whole Discourse being in the form of a Letter addressed to
THE RIGHT HON. H. A. L. FISHER,
President of the Board of Education.
By Henry Arthur Jones.

There you are! If you don't see what you want, ask for it. And if you can't find something to your taste, you are hard to please. Mr. Jones has compounded a Christmas pudding, and if you are a good boy, you have only to put in your thumb and pull out a plum. And make no mistake; the plums are there in abundance, rich and juicy and full-flavored—the fruits of wit and of wisdom, of humor and of good humor, of intelligence and of common sense.

More than fifty years ago Huxley defined the essentials of a liberal education in a series of short sentences, unforgettable in their felicity of phrase. A little later Huxley himself labored loyally on the London School Board to introduce a program of studies fit for the children of the poor, for whom the board schools were primarily intended. Now Mr. Fisher, the President of the British Board of Education, has made himself responsible for an act intended to provide the British Islands with a truly national system of education. Henry Arthur Jones has addressed this letter to Mr. Fisher, because he thinks that the methods of popular education, adopted half a century ago, have proved themselves inadequate and unsatisfactory. He even goes so far as to hold that the failure of this popular education is directly responsible for the present condition of the London theatres, given over to fluffy frivolity, to so-called musical comedy, and to so-called revivals.

"Shakespeare is banished from the English stage," so Mr. Jones asserts, (p. 32.)

can make epigrams, and good ones, too, but he never allows his ability to degenerate into a weakness, retaining always the power to write with directness and simplicity when the scene or the situation is serious enough to require such treatment. "The Moon and Sixpence" is a novel which tempts to lengthy comment and frequent quotation; it is not a book for lovers of saccharine, but for those who prefer to have their fiction "mixed with brains."

SYLVIA & MICHAEL

SYLVIA & MICHAEL. By Compton Mackenzie. Harper & Brothers.

MR. MACKENZIE takes care to emphasize the fact that "Sylvia & Michael" is not an independent story, but "really Book Three of 'Sylvia Scarlett,'" and that the only reason for its separate publication lies in "the difficulties of production." The reader therefore should not be surprised to find it closely connected to that history of Michael Fane issued in this country in the two volumes entitled "Youth's Encounter" and "Sinister Street" as well as to "Sylvia Scarlett." So closely connected is it with these that it would probably be scarcely intelligible to any one who either had not read or failed to remember the characters and incidents in the other volumes. By way of refreshing the reader's memory, Mr. Mackenzie has Sylvia briefly outline her past life in the form of a confession made to a priest, while during those long meditations and detailed self-analyses of hers which occupy so large a part of the book, she frequently goes back to the past, considering and weighing her own motives and emotions with the most meticulous care. From first to last she holds the centre of the stage, both in her own mind and in the novel. For, though the book is called "Sylvia & Michael," Michael Fane does not appear until the concluding third of the volume, when the author needs him for the "happy ending" of Sylvia's episodic history.

The book begins at the point where "Sylvia Scarlett" left off, when Sylvia, after the humiliation brought upon her by Arthur, fled from London to return to her old vagabond life. The opening of the present volume finds her in Paris, whence she travels to Petrograd—then Petersburg—where she has a contract to sing at the Trocadero Cabaret. In Petrograd she is very ill indeed, and recovers from delirium, with "a sense of regeneration," to find herself in a world which is at war. From Petrograd she goes to keep engagements in Kieff and Odessa, and in Kieff encounters a Russian soldier who buys her a gold bag "set with rubies, sapphires, diamonds, and emeralds," because he has 3,000 rubles and does not know what to do with them—an incident which does not impress one with its probability. She is in Odessa when it is shelled, and later goes to Bucharest. On the platform at Jassy she meets Concetta, now called Queenie Walters, the unfortunate, childish girl she had known in Grenada some six years before. "A whim of destiny" had given poor Queenie into the possession of a juggler known on the stage as Zozo, but she has broken with Zozo, and recently with his successor. Sylvia decides to take care of Queenie, and much of the story has to do with her efforts to keep the girl out of the hands of men, the climax of her endeavors coming when Zozo reappears. For Queenie is a childish and trustful person, as devoid of will and character as she is of nationality, one who "seemed to have had no lovers apart from the purchasers of youth, and to be able to look back with pride and a pleasure at nothing except the furs and dresses and jewelry with which she had been purchased."

However, practically all the women in the book save Michael's sister Stella are women who have sold themselves or been sold to various men, and that for lesser price than furs and jewelry, and though when she learned of her failure and Queenie's disappearance "Sylvia caught the waiter by the throat and shook him," she soon calmed down and accepted the situation. From Bucharest the tale moves on to Rumania, still a neutral country, and then to Nish, where Sylvia meets Michael, and where she remains with him after it is evacuated by the Serbs. They are both taken prisoner by the Bulgarians, and the book ends with their escape to Greece, and a love scene at Samothrace.

The story has a colorful and bizarre setting, yet it is the least interesting of Mr. Mackenzie's novels. It lacks the delicate subtlety of "Pinders Mead," and it has little of the vividness of the others, while the conclusion seems arbitrarily brought about by the author. It would need treatment far more deft and convincing than Mr. Mackenzie has given it to make credible a proposal of marriage from a man of Michael Fane's type and station to a woman over 30 years old who has not only lived with several men but, been actually on the streets, and that, not because of some extraordinary economic pressure but, as she herself said, for the sake of her soul, imperiled by marriage with a man overstrict and overrespectable—a somewhat curious method of salvation. The cabarets, their frequenters, and the people in the various hotels and lodging houses where Sylvia lives are not sufficiently picturesque for romance, nor have they the vivid and compelling reality which makes memorable, for instance, that Cabaret de l'Homme where Queenie Weston sang in company with the pock-marked blonde. Ruth presented as Mr. Mackenzie here presents it is only tiresome and mildly disgusting.

Sylvia's meditations and introspections take up a very large portion of the book, and after pages upon pages of them have been read one's patience begins to give out, for unfortunately Sylvia is much less interesting to the reader than she is to herself—less interesting, too, in this volume than in any of the others in which she plays a part. The scheme of the book gives an opportunity for pictures of Russia and the Balkans in wartime, but it is an opportunity of which the author has apparently endeavored to avail himself as little as possible. A brief sketch of the evacuation of Nish, one of Bulgarian methods with prisoners, and two or three of Russia and Rumania are all that are allowed, though Guy Hazlewood enters the story for a time and talks at very great length about the war, occasionally quite cleverly. The book is, of course, well written, and some of the scenes are effective; but, taken as a whole, it will prove something of a disappointment to Compton Mackenzie's admirers.

THE TAKER

THE TAKER. By Daniel Carson Goodman. Boni & Liveright.

IN the minds of many very worthy and very serious people there seems to be a curious belief that dullness is synonymous with realism. And if the dullness is very detailed, and hammered out to very great length, and enhanced with profuse verbiage, then they regard it as still more admirable, more nearly perfect realism. Bearing these facts in mind, we may reasonably expect that some of these excellent persons will regard Daniel Carson Goodman's new novel as a masterpiece of realistic writing. Entitled "The Taker," the intimation would appear to be that the hero, Leonard Vernon, was intended to represent the type which takes but never gives, while of the various women with whom he is associated and most of whom adore him, several represent the givers. Leonard does not succeed in getting much happiness, despite his large consumption of small bottles of "Pommery Sec," but on the other hand the givers are so completely miserable that no less than two of them commit suicide by swallowing poison—tragic events which leave the reader calmly indifferent. For although Mr. Goodman has conscientiously endeavored to enliven his book by dragging in a case of arson and an attempted murder, as well as the two suicides already mentioned, no one of the incidents is told well enough to quicken one's pulse by so much as a single beat.

Considered as a theme novel, the book wabbles between this idea of the taker and that of one instantly and extremely affected by the opinions of others. Leonard is fairly well contented with his comfortable life, and with Jennie, until Mabel's criticisms begin, just as he is contented with pretty, loving Marcey, until Edna Mason suggests to him that she is an inferior and ignorant little creature.

But despite its wabbling, its long-windedness, and its poorly constructed plot, the principal defect of the book lies in its characterization. Leonard is adored by several women, two of whom, with truly touching unanimity, find life unbearable without him; yet to the reader he seems a singularly unattractive and tiresome person. He is a cad, of course, as he conclusively proves by accepting a fortune from the wife who is so obliging as to divorce him when he grows tired of her; but even though he is a cad he might have been endowed with charm of some sort. The author does, indeed, descant at some length and with some frequency regarding his good looks, but these remain as unreal and as uninteresting as his personality. Of the women, the loving, simple, illiterate and brainless Marcey is perhaps the best drawn; but she is not sufficiently well done to hold the reader's interest through many pages, and the supposedly tragic scene in which she puts her head against the chest of her drunken and snoring father

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

OAKLEY BEATTIE.—Can you tell me where I may find a poem, the last three lines of which are as follows;

For the poor that need assistance,
For the future in the distance,
For the good that I can do.

I have been unable to locate this poem after exhausting all sources available to me.

The poem is by George Linnaeus Banks and appears in various books of verse, including "Heart Throbs," (Volume 1,) the Chapple Publishing Company, Boston, Mass. It is entitled "What I Live For." The last four lines are:

For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

Poem by Maria White Lowell

MRS. F. B. S.—Where may I find a poem by Maria White, first wife of James Russell Lowell, called, I think, "Joan of Arc," and beginning:

Across the square she moved,
Sweet Joan of Arc.

The poems of Maria (White) Lowell, first wife of James Russell Lowell, were privately printed in Cambridge, Mass., in 1855. The one wanted is "Place de la Pucelle," which is in "The Poetic Old World," by L. H. Humphrey, published by Henry Holt & Co.

Some Time

C. B. H.—Who was the author of and where can I find the poem beginning:

Some time when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set.
The things which our weak judgment here has spurned,
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night.

The name of the poem is "Some Time" and the author is May Riley Smith. It is in "The Humbler Poems," second series, by Wallace and Frances Rice, published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

CONSTANCE STORRS.—The poem, "Three Hills," asked about by Elizabeth Dortch in the issue of June 29, is by Everard Owen, and was written at Harrow, December, 1915. I am quoting the poem from "A Treasury of War Poetry," published by the Houghton Mifflin Company. It is as follows:

There is a hill in England,
Green fields and a school I know,
Where the bells fly fast in Summer,
And the whispering elms grees grow,
A little hill, a dear hill,
And the playing fields below.

There is a hill in Flanders,
Heaped with a thousand slain,
Where the shells fly night and noontide,
And the ghosts that died in vain,
A little hill, a hard hill,
To the souls that died in pain.

There is a hill in Jewry,
Three crosses pierce the sky,
On the midmost He is dying
To save all those who die,
A little hill, a kind hill
To souls in jeopardy.

Answers to the query and copies of the poem were received also from "E. G. H.," Jamestown, R. I.; C. R. Mitchell, White Plains, N. Y.; "Lawrence," Kingston, N. Y.; O. P. Surfer, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Horatio G. Cozzens, New York; Harriette Keating, New York; Helen O. Hertzog, Bethlehem, Penn.; "H. G. S.," New York; Frances J. Schriver, Staten Island; Elizabeth Feagles, New York, and Norvin T. Harris, Shadwell, Va.

Poem by Ingersoll

L. B.—Perhaps your correspondent, Joseph Tracy, refers to the last stanza of Robert G. Ingersoll's poem, "The Declaration of the Free":

Is there beyond the silent night
An endless day?
Is death a door that leads to light?
We cannot say;
The tongueless secret locked in fate,
We do not know—we hope and wait.

Parting

HARRY T. BAKER.—The line "Wet, bird-haunted English lawn," sought by Mrs. C. L. Moss in your issue of May 25, is from Matthew Arnold's poem "Parting," in his group of lyrics entitled "Switzerland." The passage in which the line occurs is as follows:

But on the stairs what voice is this I hear,
Buoyant, as morning, and as morning clear?
Say, has some wet, bird-haunted English lawn
Lent it the music of its trees at dawn?
Or was it from some sun-fleck'd mountain brook
That the sweet voice its upland clearness took?

Answers to this appeal were also received from Charles E. Stratton, Boston, and Annie E. Dickinson, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

"Along the Road"

W. H. VAIL.—In your issue of Book Review under date of May 25, "H. N." requests information about the poem "Walked With Grief." No doubt the following short poem is the one desired, entitled "Along the Road," by Robert Browning Hamilton:

I walked a mile with Pleasure,
She chattered all the way;
But left me none the wiser
For all she had to say.

I walked a mile with Sorrow,
And ne'er a word said she;
But, oh, the things I learned from her,
When Sorrow walked with me.

Answers to this appeal were also received from V. Ingersoll, New York; Mrs. Geo. K. McGraw, Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. R. A. Weston, West Haven, Conn.; Helen E. Baker, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Adelaide M. Prime, Middletown, N. Y.; Edward W. Weller, New York; Mae Staley, Sharon Springs, N. Y.; Iona A. McNulty, Philadelphia, Penn.; S. Hartley, University Place, Neb., and Seymour Friedsam, New York.

Boys Who Never Grew Up

M. K. JONES.—I notice in THE BOOK REVIEW of May 25 a request from Eleanor L. Vosburgh for the following poem, which I take pleasure in sending. It was written by Charles Law Watkins on the Somme in December, 1916:

THE BOYS WHO NEVER GREW UP.
To the Foreign Legion.

If the bowl be of gold and the liquor of flame,
What if poison lie in the cup?
If the maiden be fair—our soul's in the game,
If her kisses be death—we'll kiss just the same,
Sang the legion of boys who never grew up.

Blind with the blindness of youth, but with all of it
Clearer of vision than seers! The refrain
"France is best" smote their ears, and the call of it
Woke the boy dreamers from Nippon to Spain,
Boers from the veldt and Hidalgos from Aragon,
Cowmen from Argentine, Yankees from Maine,
Race of the Caesars from Venice to Taragon,
Rallied to France to play soldier again.

Under the tricolor, long khaki files of them
Through the Etolle, down the Champs
Marched, while grisettes blew their kisses to miles of them,
And only the old brushed the tear stains away—
Out where the crows spread their ominous pinions
Shadowing France from Nancy to Fay,
Singing they marched 'gainst the Kaiser's gray minions,
Singing the song of boyhood at play:

If the bowl be of gold and the liquor of flame,
What if poison lie in the cup?
If the maiden be fair—our soul's in the game,
If her kisses be death—we'll kiss just the same,
Sang the legion of boys who will never grow up!

The sub-editor of The American Field Service Bulletin, Paris, France, writes that the poem was published in that paper June 1, 1918, and sends the original copy. The author in the early days of the American Field Service was a member of Section VIII.

To Them That Died

D. S. STRAUSS.—Answering the inquiry of "M. S. R." in The Review of Books of June 15, William Alexander Percy's sonnet entitled "To Them That Died in Battle," beginning:

How blossomy must be the Halls of Death
Against the coming of the newly dead—

was published in The North American Review in June, 1916.

"Gone"

MRS. W. H. PARKER.—The poem asked for by C. O. B in THE BOOK REVIEW of June 15 is "Gone," by Mary E. Coleridge, and can be found in the Oxford Book of Victorian Verse.

This query was answered also by Louella D. Everett, Boston, Mass.

APPEALS TO READERS

E. D. BROOKES BROWN.—Can any of your readers give me the words of the epitaph that is on the monument at Newstead Abbey, erected by Lord Byron to the memory of his dog "Ho-swain," or tell me where I could get a photograph of the same?

Until He Died

J. H. P.—Can some reader give the correct quotation and the occasion for the following:

He never made a brow grow dark,
Nor caused an eye to shed a tear
Until he died.
To whom was the reference made?

"Great Homer Nodded"

O. C. DOUGLAS.—Please give me the source of the following lines:

Great Homer nodded and th' admiring throng

Did think him gracious and acclaimed him long.
Tho' Homer's god but drowsiness betrayed
Yet he, by plaudits waked, his thanks conveyed.

Named After a Heroine

MRS. O. P.—A friend of mine, when quite young, lost her mother—she has a faint recollection of her mother telling her that she was named after the heroine of some novel she had read—the name is "Lavina."—I would appreciate it very much to learn the name of the novel.

Knees of the Gods

L. S. H.—Can any one tell me the origin of the expression: "On the knees of the gods?"

BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

Seeger a poet, these young men are exactly alike. They are all "Happy Warriors." They all adore their families, they are all sportsmen, they are all elder brothers—whatever their actual youth—to the men in their commands; not one of them has an instant's doubt or hesitation as to England's duty or his own. Not even those elder Elizabethans, whose adventurous careers were led in a day of less complexity than our own, possessed the simple, direct, and unambiguous motives which characterize these New Elizabethans of Mr. Osborn's enthusiasm. Perhaps he is right; perhaps the war was actually won, as an earlier one was said to be, on the playing fields of Eton and its fellow schools of the old English tradition, and by men of a single clear idea of duty, unconfused and undeviating. Perhaps Mr. Wells and Mr. Bennett and Mr. Lawrence and Mr. George and Miss Sinclair are wrong in presenting our heroes to us struggling with foes within as well as without, and sometimes standing uncertain at a crossroad that branches away from the ancient Roman road of war.

But whatever we may think of the value of "The New Elizabethans" as literature or even as a human record, its subject so transcends its form as to make the question of form comparatively insignificant. For whether these young men were the single-celled creatures Mr. Osborn would have us believe, or more truly children of their age, it is certain that they loved their country and died for it. Some of them so loved freedom that they fought in what many of their fellows thought another man's war, and died for an ideal greater than country. That their sacrifice was in vain, that their offering of youth was wasted, is a thought from which we all must shrink. It may be, as Maurice Baring says in connection with two subjects of these sketches, that "the youthful death of the very brave is, I have always felt, not only a necessary but a precious element. Glorious sorrow is as necessary, is as priceless, as the nightingale or the evening star."

But this poetical compensation is not enough. We should feel the burden of responsibility which these young heroes have placed upon our own shoulders. In the ultimate analysis, it is the duty of us who survive to see to it that they have not spilled their blood upon the thirsty soil without great and lasting benefit accruing to the race. Failing, they have passed on the torch to us.

NATIONAL PARKS

THE BOOK OF THE NATIONAL PARKS. By Robert Sterling Yard. With maps and illustrations. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

TO that large-visioned offical, Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, should go the credit of being the first to perceive the value as a national asset, both economical and recreational, of the scenic areas of this country and of devising, organizing, and furthering the means by which the American people might be better informed concerning them and the regions themselves made easier of access and enjoyment. The year before the world war started it is said that the American people spent almost $300,000,000 vacationing in Europe. That Summer the receipts of Switzerland's hotels and transportation systems amounted to $100,000,000, half of it paid by Americans, who went there to see the scenery. It was not until 1915 that the American people began to show a real interest in their own scenery sufficient to suggest that if they knew more about it they would journey through it in constantly increasing numbers. Mr. Lane saw that if the great system of national parks, with all their scenic wonders, was to be made really serviceable there would have to be an organization upon a business basis that would enable the traveling public to learn what they have that is worth seeing in their own country and would make travel to and through the parks and life in them convenient and comfortable. A successful business man who was also a lover of outdoor life in the mountains was placed at the head of the new organization of "National Park Service," Department of the Interior, and he at once set about the work of making the scenic areas of the United States, in Mr. Yard's words, "the familiar playgrounds of the whole American people, a system, which, if organized and administered with the efficiency of a great business, should even become, in time, the rendezvous of the sightseers of the world." "He foresaw," Mr. Yard continues, "in the national parks a new and great national economic asset." Mr. Yard himself is a part of that organization, being the chief of its educational division, and whatever he writes about our national parks is the outcome of personal knowledge.

This present volume, which comes at an opportune time for the enlightenment and allurement of Summer wayfarers, is packed full of interesting information that not only describes the wonderland regions, tells the tourist what he will find in each of them and how to get there, but also carries much interpretative matter that answers the questions every intelligent person is bound to want to ask when, for instance, he looks down into the Yosemite or Crater Lake, or up at Casa Grande National Monument, or Montezuma Castle. "Love of beauty spiced by wonder," the author thinks, "is the equipment for enjoyment of the average intelligent traveler of today. Now add to this a more or less equal part of the intellectual pleasure of comprehension and you have the equipment of the average intelligent traveler of tomorrow. To hasten this tomorrow," he adds, "is one of the several objects of this book." At any rate, the traveler to these wonderlands of ours will find his enjoyment of the journey very greatly enhanced by Mr. Yard's book, because it will so much enlarge his understanding of their significance and deepen and sharpen his appreciation of their beauty and grandeur and mystery. The reader who must do his traveling at home will find the work a source of delight and a storehouse of information, so eloquent are its descriptions and so full are its pages of all manner of interesting facts.

Classifying the national parks according to the character of their geology, Mr. Yard puts them into three divisions. First are those in mountainous regions whose core is of granite,—the Lafayette National Park in Maine, Mt. McKinley in Alaska, and those in the Rocky and the Sierra Nevada Mountains. Next he takes the five of volcanic origin and the four in the regions of sedimentary rock. The final section is devoted to the Grand Canyon and to the many reservations, chiefly in the Southwest, called "National Monuments," which preserve for the whole people individual places of rare historic, scenic, or other interest. Each park or monument is described fully, and with so vivid a pen that with a little imagination one almost feels one's self beholding its beauties and glories with physical eyes, its history recounted, and such facts are told concerning its geologic aspects as interpret its existence and fill with wonders its billion-yeared vista of creation. There are many beautiful illustrations from photographs and numerous maps and charts that add greatly to the work's value. The end papers present a map of the western half of the United States with the national park locations specially indicated. Mr. Yard is to be congratulated upon having had the courage and the faith in the American reading public to write a new and very different kind of travel book.

AN AVIATOR'S LETTERS

A STOP AT SUZANNE'S AND LOWER FLIGHTS. By Greayer Clover. New York: George H. Doran Company.

LIKE all personal impressions of the war, these letters and prose sketches written by a young American while serving with the French camion convoi and later as a Lieutenant in the American Aviation Service cannot be read simply as a book. Nor can they be considered in the light of a memorial to their author. They are personal footnotes to history written by a man who gave his life to help make it, and cannot be dissociated with the part he played.

Something of the boy's high-spirited zest for life, his deep sympathy with humanity, his spontaneous humor, his naïveté, and tenderness is imprisoned in his papers. His literary talent is marked; his observation is acute and his descriptions are unusually graphic. In the sketch which gives the collection its title there are passages not often surpassed for idyllic tenderness even by writers whose powers have fully matured. In "A Night With the Camion Convoi," which was originally published in Collier's Weekly, Mr. Clover gives his readers a thrilling glimpse of his personal experiences in the perilous service in which he spent six months carrying ammunition and supplies to the front.

The writer's subject matter is varied, ranging from the description of a wartime wedding to the relation of how a British Sergeant won the V. C. by throwing his helmet over a live bomb and then standing on it to prevent the explosion from killing his trenchmates. He tells also how the famous "Bastard Section" won the unlovely sobriquet of which its members were so justly proud; how the French captured Fort Malmaison, how he and three friends went A. W. O. L. together to Rheims and how Jean Descamps, whose statues stand in the parks of Bordeaux and whose pictures hang in the Luxemburg Gallery, felt about holding the rank of simple soldat.

Mr. Clover has put much of his vivid personality into his book. But to his friends he leaves the telling of his own fearlessness and generosity. It is not from him but from the tributes to him included in the book that we learn of his having given all his blankets to a needy family of Belgian refugees.

Greayer Clover, whose father edits The Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, met his death on Aug. 30, 1918, when the airplane he was flying crashed to earth behind the lines. He is buried in the cemetery at Issoudun with his brother writer and comrade of the silver wings, Lieutenant James Richard Crowe.

THE ADVENTURES OF A NOVEL [ONE]

¶ I have never known a novel so cheerfully reviewed as "The Choice," by Maurice Weyl. First of all, it was Mr. H. B. Sell, literary editor of The Daily News, Chicago, who wrote:

"'The Choice' is a real American novel by a man who knows Americans. The best modern novel that I have read in a long, long time. It is clean, it is sophisticated, it is well written."

¶ Now, Mr. Sell, whether he praises or blames, has adopted Kipling's injunction to do it "first and frequent" and has returned to "The Choice" with each succeeding issue of his literary page. In the following issue he said:

"Maurice Weyl is a born story-teller, and to my way of thinking he has written 'The Choice' in a simple, graceful style that marks him as a distinguished initiate to the fraternity of first-class modern American novelists."

¶ This is not the first time Mr. Sell has been the first to welcome a newcomer.

in order to find out whether he is still alive is actually ludicrous.

The most praiseworthy thing in the book is the fact that the author has refrained from suddenly reforming Leonard Vernon, but shows him at the end as much bewildered as ever by his own fifth-rate philosophizing and ready to advance still further down the same stupid pathway he has trodden so long.

THE GROPER

THE GROPER. By Henry G. Aikman. Boni & Liveright.

IF it were not for the publishers' statement that "The Groper" is a first novel one would be inclined to accept it as the work of an established author. For there is nothing amateurish about it, either in construction or in character portrayal, while the style, and especially the dialogue, has none of the awkward stiffness which is the usual hallmark of the novice. The plot, it is true, is a very familiar one, but it has the great merit of being at least as well known to life as to fiction—the story of the country boy who comes to the city in search of fortune. Lee Hillquit is a dreamer and an idealist; he thoroughly believes many of the copy-book maxims, maintains that "success comes to the man who works for it" as the inevitable reward of merit, and also that if a man "trusts people—looks for the very best in them—he won't be disappointed."

With these ideas and ideals, backed up by a good education, he goes to Detroit in the September of 1907, at a time when the automobile industry was just emerging from infancy and the city's great growth and prosperity were just beginning. At first he honestly tries to put his doctrine of trustfulness and hard work into practice, only to find himself, after months of work, the dupe of a real estate concern of decidedly dubious methods. Then, just as he is about to give up and go back to his home in Chatham, luck takes him by the hand. For a while he congratulates himself on his good fortune, only to discover that he must pay a price for it, and a stiff one, too—the price of his self-respect. It is exacted from him insidiously. He had no intention of paying it nor any idea that it would be demanded of him. It was indeed his very idealism that for some time cloaked his relations with Mrs. Curran, even from himself. When he breaks loose the mischief has been done. However, though he wanders for a while in a very slough of dissipation, he emerges from it and presently sees himself, as always, a veritable groper "stumbling, floundering, following false lights, at intervals catching a real glimpse of truth." In his weaknesses and his posings, his vanities and his sins and that something fundamentally fine within him which at last engages him, after his great shock, "to begin to live," he is a very real human being. There is verisimilitude in the accounts of his experiences with the real estate and motor car businesses, and especially in the big department store, the inner workings of which the reader comes to know so well.

The denouement of the novel is abrupt and not very deftly managed; but many of the minor characters are cleverly drawn, the clearly and simply told story is interesting, and the book as a whole gives an excellent picture of Detroit during the years from 1907 to 1915, even though it entirely ignores the war. In short, "The Groper" is an interesting and unusually realistic first novel.

THE TRAIL OF THE BEAST

THE TRAIL OF THE BEAST. By Achmed Abdullah. James A. McCann Company.

A VERY clever detective story, complicated, ingenious, and swift moving, is Achmed Abdullah's "The Trail of the Beast." The hero is a young American detective, James Oliver Tennant, employed by a famous French agency, the "Agence Ducastel," in Paris. The tale begins in January, 1914, with the murder of one Anatole Jarvet, member of the Chamber of Deputies, much beloved by the Quartier des Halles and the Apaches, "a powerful political figure, an ultra-radical Socialist and intolerant pacifist," whose constant cry was "Down with the army!" Tennant is immediately summoned, but before he can so much as get to Jarvet's house the police have arrested Mlle. Angèle Lantaigne, a charming young actress, the only daughter of the chief of the secret police. Angèle Lantaigne is a friend of Tennant's old schoolmate, Lord Allistair Manzies-Kerr, recently returned from Indo-China and now living with Tennant in his apartment, and Tennant himself had met them walking together on the afternoon of the murder, and that not far from the place where the crime was committed. Though the girl was quickly released, it was soon apparent to Tennant that both she and Manzies-Kerr knew a good deal more than they chose to tell, and he was not greatly surprised to find himself working against instead of with the secret police. Then came another mysterious murder, obviously connected with the first, and before long "the double crime had grown and bloated into a maze of secret diplomacy, into a gigantic chess game where Jarvet and Steynard were but pawns, and whose directing energy was the national mind, diseased with mad ambition, of imperial Germany."

The book is written in a somewhat flamboyant style, but the plot is deftly worked out and the author plays fair with the reader, who learns whatever Tennant learns, seeing the whole affair through the eyes of the young American detective, whose method was one of what he called "applied psychology," and who was "really too clever a man to be afraid of inconsistencies."

H. A. JONES ON THE ENGLISH DRAMA

universally operative, Shakespeare has gradually disappeared, and is now making an inglorious, unobserved, and possibly final exit. * * *

Enter Popular Education. Exit Shakespeare from our theatres, unheeded and despised. That is an indictment of our present system of Popular Education, so severe in its implications that no further evidence is necessary. It is conclusive in itself.

Mr. Jones calls attention to the fact that Shakespeare was for three centuries the "chief popular educator and entertainer" of the English people, "in his own legitimate classroom, the theatre." And he laments that "now Popular Education has done its perfect work and Shakespeare is dead in the only place where he will ever exercise a fruitful influence upon the English masses—the English theatre," (p. 33.)

Mr. Jones holds these opinions firmly, and he has expressed them vigorously. He is a far more competent witness than I can pretend to be or any other American separated from England by a thousand leagues of "salt, unplumbed, estranging sea." He may be right. But I cannot help doubting whether Popular Education—to retain the capital letters wherewith Mr. Jones holds it up to scorn—is really responsible for the infrequency of Shakespearean performances in the London theatres during the last eight or ten years. There may be other reasons for the decline and fall of the bard of Stratford—perhaps only contradictory causes and yet to be reckoned with. There is the war, for one thing; and war fills the theatres with eager devourers of fluff and frivolity not always free from immorality and even indecency. Then there is the absence from the English-speaking stage at the present time of any Shakespearean actor of the compelling authority of Edwin Booth and Henry Irving. Of course, this absence of a commanding Shakespearean actor may be a cause or it may be a consequence of a decline in the frequency of Shakespearean performances.

Shakespeare may or may not be dead or dying in the theatres of Great Britain, but he is alive in the theatres of the United States—as was most unexpectedly revealed last Winter here in New York, where the modestly announced performances of "Hamlet" by Mr. Walter Hampden and his associates were protracted week after week and month after month. It is to be noted also that the Sothern-Marlowe combination, with a repertory almost exclusively Shakespearean, was the most popular and the most profitable of all our varied theatrical enterprises.

Suggestive as are Mr. Jones's opinions and arguments, stimulating as they are and thought-provoking, they are calculated for the meridian of Greenwich and not for that of Washington—which may make them a little less useful to us, although none the less entertaining.

It appears from what Mr. Jones tells us that London has not been able to find a compromise on the vexed question of child-actors as satisfactory as that which has been arrived at in New York. If children are debarred from acting until they are 14 years old, then there are half a dozen Shakespearean plays which cannot be properly presented. "Many modern plays of very high reputation are also excluded from our stage," so Mr. Jones reminds us. He admits that there is not a little dialogue in the fluffy-and-frivolity plays of the hour which is "unfit for children's ears. * * * I would certainly protect children from hearing it. I would equally protect the older performers from speaking it. I would also protect the entire audiences from listening to it, if that were possible," (p. 53.)

Although it has seemed best in this review to dwell more particularly on Mr. Jones's deliverances upon Shakespeare and upon child-actors and upon other topics related more or less intimately to the stage, it would be unfair to a brilliant controversialist to leave upon readers the impression that he is any less brilliant when he points his pen at other marks unconnected with the theatre. Like his Latin predecessor in dramatic authorship, Mr. Jones holds nothing human to be foreign to him. He is a man, first of all; and then he is a citizen of a mighty Commonwealth; even if he is also a playwright. He has opinions—and he expresses them with outspoken frankness—on the League of Nations, which does not command his ardent approval. He has opinions about Pacifism and about Internationalism, opinions which are valuable and which are also quotable:

> I may be told by some gentle theorists that Internationalism does not mean what I have defined it to mean, that it is merely an effusion of muddled, balmy amiability—a tumbler of mild altruism mixed with a teaspoonful of weak patriotism or a tumbler of weak patriotism flavored with tincture of universal benevolence. (p. 191.)
> There are very few men living who are destitute of the instinct of patriotism. Our Pacifists are superabundantly endowed with it. They beam with the purest ardors—for every country but their own. (p. 203.)

CHILD HUMOR

INTELLECTUAL precocity in children is usually of doubtful interest. The eight-year-old prodigy who "speaks a piece" from SHAKESPEARE and talks literary matters at social gatherings is not to be shunned by all except its parents. The marvelous achievements in learning of the infantile JOHN STUART MILL are among the curiosities of literature—and most of us can be thankful that we were not personally familiar with a babyhood marred by the prattling of Greek and Hebrew. For, after all, it is the naturalness, the normality, of childhood that constitutes its principal charm—and the infant prodigy is inevitably abnormal and unnatural. But not always, it appears. Literary London is just now laughing delightedly over a romance of high life written by "Daisy Ashford," "an authoress of nine years." And London is laughing because the book is quite the most humorous thing that ever found its way into print—and it is genuine humor because it is absolutely natural, and written as, we imagine, a not too precocious child, who has dipped into SCOTT and, perhaps, HARRISON AINSWORTH, and who has incidentally heard a great deal of the doings of royalty, might write. Sir JAMES M. BARRIE, in his preface to the little book (it is called "The Young Visiters; or, Mr. Salteena's Plan," and has just been published in this country by George H. Doran) tells us that the nine-year-old author "was one of a small family who lived in the country, invented their own games, dodged the governess, . . . Daisy read everything that came her way, including the grown-up novels of the period." Now that she is a grown-up woman, she tells Mr. BARRIE that "I adored writing and used to pray for bad weather, so that I need not go out, but could stay in and write." At her home she heard just the kind of talk and met the kind of people that would furnish her with the material for this "romance of high life" that has remained all these years, with its bad spelling and weird punctuation, in the "stout little notebook" that has at last fallen into the hands of a publisher.

DOUBTLESS there will be much discussion regarding the authenticity of "Daisy Ashford." Is "The Young Visiters" the work of a child of 9? Its humor is certainly the humor of childhood, because it is absolutely unconscious. It is mated with the gravity and innocence of a child who strays into fields that traditionally belong to maturity. If the author was a grown-up person, he or she performed the astonishing trick of assuming, for the nonce, the stature and the point of view of a child of 9. Isn't this, for instance, the way a child of 9 would imagine a court "levie" presided over by the Prince of Wales:

> The sumshious room was packed with men of a noble nature dressed like the earl in satin knickerboccers etc and with ladies of every hue with long trains & jewels by the dozen. You could hardly moove in the gay throng. Dukes were as nought as there were a good lot of princes & Arch Dukes as it was a very superior levie indeed. The earl & Mr. Salteena struggled through the crowd till they came to a platform draped with white velvit. Here on a golden chair, was seated the Prince of Wales in a lovely ermine cloak & a small but costly crown. He was chatting quite genially with some of the crowd.
> Up clambered the earl followed at top speed by Mr. Salteena.
> Hullo Clincham cried the Prince quite homely & not at all grand so glad you turned up —quite a squash eh.
>
> A bit overpowering Your Highness said the earl who was quite used to all this may I introduce my friend Lord Hyssops he is staying with me so I thought I would bring him along if you dont mind Prince.
>
> Not at all cried the genial prince looking rarther supprised. Mr. Salteena bowed so low he nearly fell off the platform & as the prince put out a hand Mr. Salteena thought he had better kiss it. The Prince smiled kindly I am pleased to see you Lord Hyssops he said in a regal voice.
>
> Then the Earl chipped in & how is the dear Queen he said revrunitly.
> Not up to much said his Highness she feels the heat poor soul and he waved to a placard which said in large letters The Queen is indisposed.

One could quote indefinitely from "Daisy's" book, telling how the "genial Prince" ordered "champaigne" and ices, and how he "lapped up his strawberry ice," remarking at the same time "all I want is peace & quiut & a little fun & here I am tied down to this life he said taking off his crown being royal has many painfull drawbacks." So royalty and "sumshious levies" appear to childhood of 9 years. Or—is it possible that in "The Young Visiters" the publishers have stumbled upon a posthumous work by LEWIS CARROLL, the one author above all others who succeeded in creating a world of the imagination as such a world might have grown up and flourished in the mind of a child—and only in the mind of a child or of LEWIS CARROLL?

AS one might expect, the leading feature of the August number of THE NEW YORK TIMES CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE is the German Peace Treaty. Until very recently the text of this historical document has not been available even to the individual members of those legislative bodies before which it comes for ratification; while for the general reader the treaty in its entirely is extremely difficult if not impossible to procure. In THE CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE, however, it is published in the full official revised text, word for word, as signed at Versailles, together with the explanatory maps. There are over 75,000 words in the treaty and it occupies over eighty-four pages of the magazine. Nowhere else in this country has it been printed with maps in its complete form, not even in the Congressional Record, nor in any Senate document. Besides the German Peace Treaty the August CURRENT HISTORY gives the official text of the treaty creating the new Polish State, and also the text of the Franco-American-British alliance. All three documents are preceded by an account of the final negotiations with the Germans, the scenes at the signing of the treaty, the text of the protests by General SMUTS and the Chinese delegates, the declarations of President WILSON, Premier LLOYD GEORGE, Premier CLEMENCEAU, and Secretary LANSING regarding the treaty, also the story of how the latter was ratified by the Germans. Among other special features in the August CURRENT HISTORY are accounts of the overseas flight of the R-34, the sinking of the German fleet, and the advent of wartime prohibition.

REBECCA'S PROMISE

REBECCA'S PROMISE. By Frances R. Sterrett. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co.

Readers who have a liking for saccharine fiction will find Frances R. Sterrett's new story, "Rebecca's Promise," very much to their taste. The heroine, Rebecca Mary Wyman, is a poverty-stricken young public school teacher given to much worrying about the future, and especially about her own old age. A philosophical elder cousin advises her to take out what she calls "memory insurance" by storing up all the pleasant recollections she can while she is young, so that they may cheer and comfort her when she grows old. Rebecca Mary promises to do so, and immediately agreeable things begin to happen to her. Old Mrs. Peter Simmons, the richest and most important woman in Walco, where Rebecca Mary lives, takes a fancy to her and showers invitations upon her. A wealthy aunt gives her $1,000, thus enabling her to purchase the beautiful clothes she has always wanted and which she needs in order to attend the dances, dinners, &c., to which she is invited by and through Mrs. Peter Simmons, who, although a grandmother, is an extremely active person, fond of society and very well dressed. Of course various men fall in love with Rebecca Mary. A real Count asks her to marry him, but she prefers a wealthy and altogether eligible young American, with whom it is to be supposed that she "lived happily ever after."

A Larger Public for Better Books

What the working out of an ideal has done in Chicago for Book Publishers

The Chicago Daily News Book Page entered the literary field three years ago with a well-defined ideal. That ideal was better reading and more of it.

Three great problems were apparent. First, there was a degree of indifference to books in general. Second, most of the interest which was shown in them was confined to the meretricious "best-seller" type. Third, and as a natural result of the second consideration, almost any book of the subtler or more literary character was looked upon with suspicion and regarded as "high brow."

The task was to show the larger public that the reading of good books is one of the most fascinating of occupations. And to establish a taste for these books of merit, it was necessary to prove to readers that a story which is not purposely sensational may be fully as gripping or charming as a "thriller."

To meet this situation The Daily News set out deliberately to establish a new kind of Book Page. Not only was the purpose of this page to separate the literary sheep from the goats and to condemn mercilessly all unworthy time-wasters, but to spare no pains to promote the sale and circulation of writing of merit.

Obviously, an appeal to those already deeply interested in literary affairs was not sufficient. It was necessary to present views and discussions which would be read and enjoyed by people who either had not yet learned to discriminate, or who did not care to discriminate. For that reason an entirely different style and point of view were developed.

And the page is different in style and point of view, which makes the reading of it every Wednesday a delightful habit with thousands of Chicago men and women. They know that they will not be preached at, talked down to, or bored by The Book Page. They are always confident that they will receive through it the most reliable information, criticism, and discourse in a style which is brilliant and informal.

Has this new sort of book page been successful?

No indication of the success that has attended the venture is more eloquent than the testimonial of the book publishers of the country as expressed in the volume of advertising they have done, and continue to do, in The Book Page. Here is the record for the first six months of 1919:

The Daily News FIRST	54,154 lines
Tribune	51,495 "
Post	25,017 "
Herald-Examiner	8,010 "

No one is in better position than these publishers to determine the merit of The Book Page. They know that it sells books, and that to sell them it must have wide circulation among the kind of people who buy and read books.

This six-month record is a story of success—a vindication of the idea that a book page need not wear myopic specs in order to attain high literary position.

The Book Page is a success, and it continues to be, month in and month out, the main point of contact between America's leading publishers of good books and Chicago's greatest single audience of readers—the more than 1,200,000 men, women, and children who buy and read the 371,528 copies of The Daily News sold every day.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

MONEY AND PRICES. By J. Laurence Laughlin, Ph. D. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

THE appreciation of goods and services and the depreciation of money are topics uppermost in all circles where either the art or science of market operations is discussed. Professor Laughlin has treated them as practical rather than theoretical matters. Instead of discussing the principles of the rise and fall of prices—or perhaps better expressed as a means of discussing them—he has analyzed other periods like the present, when there has been so much credit in circulation that gold has lost its purchasing power to considerable extent, and there has been talk of inflation, and its results and causes. No nation is now using gold as currency, and there never was so much paper money issued, so that if the volume of currency ever raises prices it should now do so. But Professor Laughlin doubts that inflation raises prices, and even doubts that prices now are inflated. He attaches more importance to the volume of goods than to the volume of circulation, and asks what force impels a man with gold to give more than before for a commodity produced and sold freely in the open market. Goods and services are exchanged for goods and services, with money as a tool, merely to ease the exchange. That is to say, the goods and services are related to each other, rather than to the money, and its volume has little to do with the price movement. In any case, it is necessary to examine both sides of the equation, and not the money side merely. Always some prices are rising and other prices falling, whatever the volume of gold or money in circulation. Thus he gives instances to show that the prices of forty-nine articles have moved in one direction, and the prices of fifty-one other articles in the opposite direction, during an increased supply of gold, and he asks what the argument is respecting the effect of the supply of gold on price movement. He suggests that goods are practically "coined" by their relation to currency and credit whenever they are bought or sold, and insists that the currency of the goods is more important than the volume of the currency.

The discoveries of gold, and the devices of credit which supplement gold, are offset in their effect to raise prices by the industrial processes which increase the supply of goods, and thus lower prices. Moreover, the circulation of both goods and money has been increased by modern facilities, and the increased velocity of movement compensates for deficiency of gold money. It takes only half as long to ship gold between New York and London as it did, and only one-third as long between Australia and London. The professor might have added that credit can be telegraphed while specie must be shipped, and that our Federal Reserve system "clears" a billion dollars of business each week by mere book entries on telegraphed orders, without circulating anything. This business is done over continental distances equal to the ocean spaces which separate continents, and there needs little imagination to suggest that international business will eventually, if not soon, be "cleared" like interstate business in the United States. Repeatedly the professor emphasizes that price movements reflect the movement of goods, and that the price movements and currency volumes are of inferior significance—results rather than causes. Purchasing power comes from goods more than from money; but the increase of goods does not raise prices, and therefore the volume of currency does not affect prices either, as is contended by those who hold the quantity theory of money.

At a time when there is so much paper money in use and when there is complaint that there is not enough gold cover for the paper, it is useful to cite his calculation of the cost of the greenbacks as currency. There are still those who think that it is economy to use printed money and dispense with gold. But only Bolshevist venture to dispense with gold as cover for the paper. The cost to us of the gold cover for $346,681,016 greenbacks is the bonds issued to get the gold, to aetotal of $357,815,400. We have redeemed $407,000,000 of greenbacks, and they are still outstanding, having been reissued. If the greenbacks had been retired when we resumed specie payments by the issue of 4 per cent. bonds, the annual interest charge would have been $1,765,376 less than the interest on the bonds issued to provide cover for the "cheap" greenbacks. By a similar argument he concludes that Government notes, a loan without interest, are always a costly means of providing currency. Yet there is hardly a Government which has not in part financed the great war by the issue of Treasury paper, thus increasing the money supply without reference to the needs of trade. Even those who dissent from the theory that the quantity of money controls prices agree that the increase of money without regard to the necessities of trade unsettles the basis of contracts and business security. When money and goods increase together, something more is needed to prove either that the money is inflated or that prices need rise. But that does not extend to such issues of paper that it can be disbursed by weight, without bothering to count the notes. The quantity theory of money is not baseless; it is only overworked.

RURAL ENGLAND AND WAR

THE VILLAGE WIFE'S LAMENT. By Maurice Hewlett. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

A GULF of more than distance separates the American reader from the England of Mr. Hewlett's new poem, and before a generation shall have passed a gulf of more than time will separate it from the memory of then living Englishmen. For it is a country whose lowliest cottager exclaims,

> And happy we whose poor estate
> Claims our work for our bread; > where
> —the laws of life
> Are holy to the poor, and where these happy poor are bidden to

> Hallow with praise the wheeling days
> Until the cord goes slack,
> Until the very heartstring frays,
> Until the suffering back
> Can do no more; keep then the door,
> And, thankful in the sun,
> Watch you the same unending war
> Ontaken by your son.

Perhaps rural England was like this once: it is fairly certain that after the last of this humble and grateful race, of whom Mr. Hewlett sings, dies, none like unto it will follow.

A young woman reared in this pious tradition which already seems so strange to us, and knowing within a crowded year wifehood and motherhood, and the loss of her husband by war and of her baby through her own resulting grief and strain, tells the story of her life and sorrow in a simple and sometimes moving ballad measure. Mr. Hewlett portrays for us the toll war takes of the simplest and most innocent of human beings, with the desire that the heart—if any such there still be in the world—which sees aught of benefit to mankind in national strife, may be straightway changed. In his after-note to the poem he says, "As human nature still actually is, no League of Nations conceivable to us will be able to save us from war. Rend your hearts and not your armaments."

The sketch he draws is pitiful enough; it is as pitiful as that of a kitten cruelly tortured by a ruthless boy. Yet the boy is hardly to be restrained from his sport by a pathetic picture; he must be governed, forcibly, if need be, until he is sufficiently grown up to accept a more humane standard for himself. So with nations. "The Village Wife's Lament," or any other lament, unfortunately, will not rend the hearts that need the rending. It might be as well, after all, to attempt the armaments!

NEW HERO TALES

THE NEW ELIZABETHANS. A First Selection of the Lives of Young Men Who Have Fallen in the Great War. By E. B. Osborn. John Lane Company.

THIS is a human anthology—a bouquet of budding lives plucked in their first glow and fragrance by the hand of death. The present volume contains brief sketches of twenty-three lads and young men—English, American, Canadian, and Australian—who volunteered early in the war, and fell almost as early. They were all lads of "family," of good education, of fine tradition. Several of them had given promise of considerable achievement in literature and other arts; others had already won international fame as athletes; the oldest, Captain Kettle, was a statesman in the making. They, and those others whom Mr. Osborn apparently intends to include in future volumes, form a bright and shining company, the stuff of immortality, and it is well to have them gathered into a single gallery of heroic portraits.

Mr. Osborn's gallery is so largely in the nature of a pious memorial that it would be unkind and possibly unjust to consider it on its own merits apart from the merits of its subject. His sketches partake too wholly of the nature of affectionate family reminiscences to be human documents. Except for certain natural bents and external circumstances, which made of Anthony Wilding a tennis champion, of John MacFarlan Charlton a naturalist, and of Alan

THE MOON AND SIXPENCE

Do you wish to read a book that is different, that does not give you the feeling of having read it before, done in a different style? "The Moon and Sixpence," says Heywood Broun in the Tribune, New York, "goes up stream against the conventional current of Anglo-Saxon fiction. It is not only brilliantly written but seems to us a great book. At any rate, it is the most absorbing story we have read in a year. It is full of surprising turns and yet each is convincing just as soon as it happens." And in the Chicago News, under the head of "Conrad Equalled," J. V. A. Weaver writes, "'The Moon and Sixpence' is one of the finest pieces of romantic realism that I have ever seen—the resemblance to Conrad is unmistakable. There are places where Maugham seems to excel his model in the treatment of the women and in humor, which here is stinging and satirical. It is no fault that Maugham has followed Conrad; he has done a thundering good piece of work—over in England, Maugham is recognized as a realistic novelist of great skill."

WHAT AMERICA DID IN THE WORLD WAR

WHAT AMERICA DID. A Record of Achievement in the Prosecution of the War. By Florence Finch Kelly. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

HERE is a book that will be received with rejoicing by those who are proud of what the United States did to help beat Germany. Things happened with such bewildering rapidity during the two years that we were in the war, prodigies were accomplished with such amazing ease, that there arose a tendency to accept them as a matter of course. And now that peace is here again and we are trying to settle down into our normal lives and forget the years of nightmare that interrupted the even tenor of our way, there is a tendency in some quarters to forget the war—or try to forget it, for to succeed in such an inglorious endeavor is an impossibility.

Mrs. Kelly's book is calculated to make even the most would-be forgetful thrill with pride. It presents in concise and clear fashion America's prodigies in preparing for war and waging it; the incredible energy with which this peace-loving nation girded itself to vanquish the war lords of Germany; the driving power which Americans put behind their every effort. In her pages we live again those marvelous days when, out of practically nothing, we created an army of millions; fed, equipped, and housed them; transported them across sea lanes bristling with hostile submarines to battlefields 3,000 miles away.

She tells how our colossal munitions industry sprang into being, how the Medical Department of our army worked wonders, how we transformed the ports of France from humdrum, sleepy little towns into hives of throbbing activity. She shows how our navy developed and helped to win the great victory, how thousands of our young men became daredevil aviators. She describes how the country suddenly was dotted with huge cantonments and blackened with the smoke of factories of war material. She tells of the terrible American inventions which another year of war would have loosed against the Germans, among them a poisonous gas of such awful power that it is supposed to have influenced the Germans to beg for peace when they did without risking an encounter with this newest evidence of American inventiveness and deadly earnestness of purpose.

She tells of the great Liberty Loan drives, recalls once more to us the splendid speeches and rallies and bursts of martial music that thrilled us all while the drives were in full swing. She pays tribute, in short, to the excellent work of Americans in all walks of life; last, but far from least, to the women of America.

Mrs. Kelly's book is filled from beginning to end with figures, but it is in no sense a dry compendium of statistics. The statistics are all there, arranged in such a way as to make the book invaluable for ready reference, but beneath it all their glows an enthusiasm, vigorous and proud, that lends life and light to the style, lifts it far above the ordinary run of such writing. For in it is a something that makes the reader glow and thrill with the writer; it puts him, too, back in those proud days of our war, imparts to him the enthusiasm that inspires the author at every stroke of her pen.

In these days when much is being talked on every side of the mistakes of the war, of the shortcomings of this and that department, a book like Mrs. Kelly's is most timely for those Americans who would keep before their eyes the tremendous nature of America's task, and the triumphant way in which she accomplished it. Mistakes there were, of course; if even wars so small in comparison with that just fought as almost to be unworthy of mention in the same breath produced a crop of mistakes how could it be supposed that the greatest of all conflicts should move smoothly from beginning to end, especially that part of it that fell to a country which had consistantly scorned the path of the sword? Mrs. Kelly's pages serve to show that undue emphasis on the errors of the war must infallibly tend to warp the vision; it is straining at the gnat and swallowing the camel. No better antidote can be suggested for the depressed feeling occasioned by tales of derelictions here and there in America's war record than a plunge into the refreshing pages of Mrs. Kelly's book.

It is not written in superlatives. It is compact and sober. In no other book up to date have the many phases of America's stupendous achievement been gathered, correlated, and combined so successfully into a terse, flowing narrative as here.

My purpose in this book [says the author in her preface] has been to condense into a brief account just those things that the ordinary man or woman wants to know about how we prepared for and waged our share in the world war. I have tried to picture the large outlines of achivement, to present the important facts, and to show how it was all inspired and rushed forward by the flaming spirit of the people. Volumes will be required and will, of course, be written to tell comprehensively and in detail the complete story of America's many-sided effort in the prosecution of the war. But I have sought, rather, to make such a book as would meet the needs of the everyday reader by disregarding details, and weaving into the panorama of our war adventure only the essential facts of each phase of war effort, and the spirit by which it was all unceasingly animated.

Throughout her book the author kept that aim of hers before her mind. "The large outlines of achievement"—that is what she has pictured with painstaking skill, "The panorama of our war adventure" and "the flaming spirit of the people" and constantly brought to the consciousness of the reader—which is no small task.

Let others take the floor to point our shortcomings in the war, our blunders, our unmilitary methods. They have their place, many of them are sincere, many of them will do good by placing censure where it is deserved, and preventing similar errors in the future. To them Mrs. Kelly leaves the field undisputed. Hers was the task of making Americans proud of what ought to fill them with pride; of making them glow with satisfaction at those things in America's war effort which are beyond censure. And she succeeded.

CERVANTES

CERVANTES. By Rudolph Schevill, Professor of Spanish, University of California. New York: Duffield & Co.

COMING at a time when the extraordinary vogue of Vicente Blasco Ibáñez, author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "Blood and Sand," has turned the eyes of readers to Spain and Spanish writers, this story of the life of the greatest Spaniard of them all deserves a cordial welcome. Too little is known of the author of "Don Quixote," the book that competes with the Bible for the honor of being the most translated. "Don Quixote," as Mr. Schevill writes, "has become a part of the literary conscience of the world, and, therefore, possesses the rare fame of being known, at least by name, to countless persons who have not had the leisure to peruse it."

And the life of Cervantes is well worth following even by those not deeply interested in the works of the illustrious Spaniard. It is a tale of stirring adventure and of hardship. Cervantes, after living the life of a Spanish student, exciting and precarious enough in itself during the sixteenth century, became a soldier, fought at the great battle of Lepanto, was captured later by the Moors, and spent a long time in captivity at Algiers, during which he made attempts to escape, quite like a hero of dare-devil romance.

Mr. Schevill has made a careful study of the scanty material available for a life of Cervantes and sought to remedy the gaps by quoting passages from his works which may reasonably be assumed to portray personal experiences of the author. Even if they do not, they serve to give an idea of the times in which he lived and of his environment.

The author takes pains to point out that "Don Quixote" is by no means Cervantes's only work of great merit. That it is sui generis immeasurably above all the rest, Mr. Schevill acknowledges. "No author can hope to make the same great conquest with two works," he says. But he puts in a plea for the famous Spanlard's "Exemplary Novels," which, he declares, deserve popularity even today, more than three hundred years since they were written.

"The Novels," says Mr. Schevill, "would undoubtedly attract a wider reading public among us if it were more generally known to what extent they are a priceless document on the civilization of the Spanish peninsula. All Spain is there. Indeed, the title would be more accurate, and, no doubt, more attractive, if it could be changed into Pictures and Manners of the Spanish People. Cities and individuals alike have received the breath of life and will continue to survive for us on these extraordinary pages. Here is Madrid, there is Seville, there is Toledo, each drawn with its most significant aspects, and everywhere we meet with the unmistakable spirit of the Spanish people as a whole."

Let us hope, then, that the vogue of Blasco Ibáñez as the foremost Spanish writer of today may lead to a renewed and more inquisitive interest in the master of all Spanish writers, he whose Don Quixote, according to Turgenev, is one of the two eternal human types, the other being Hamlet.

A Nine Years' Wonder!

THE YOUNG VISITERS
By Daisy Ashford
With an introduction by J. M. Barrie

"Place your order to-day with your favorite bookseller for 'THE YOUNG VISITERS.' It is without the slightest doubt the funniest book that was ever bound between covers. I predict a vogue for 'THE YOUNG VISITERS' that will cast a deep dark shade over the 'Pigs is Pigs' tradition, surpass the supersale of 'Dere Mable' and blot out all memory of 'The Four Horsemen Of The Apocalypse.' If you don't get one of the first hundred thousand of 'THE YOUNG VISITERS' it will be your own fault; you have been warned."—Henry B. Sell in The Chicago News.

HELPING FRANCE
A Story of the Red Cross in the Devastated Area
By RUTH GAINES, Author of "A Village In Picardy," etc.

A thrilling story, written from personal observation and participation, of how the Red Cross and allied organizations have been laying the foundations for reclaiming France's devastated areas. It is a vivid record of sympathy, of heroism, of the difficult, patient courage which copes with nagging discomfort, with hopeless depression, as well as with actual danger. Net $2.00.

FERNANDO
By JOHN AYSCOUGH

In this book John Ayscough writes intimately of his early life and its culmination in his conversion to Catholicism during his Oxford days. The book is really a soul's self-examination. It is written in the spirit of the deepest and most reverent feeling. By its simplicity and its genial and racy humor it will appeal to many whom Cardinal Newman's Apologia and Mr. Knox's Spiritual Aeneid would fail to touch.

DEATH, THE GATE OF LIFE? (Mors Janua Vitae?) A Discussion of Certain Communications Purporting to Come from Frederic W. H. Myers. By H. A. Dallas. With an introduction by Professor W. F. Barrett, F. R. S. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

WHATEVER may be one's personal attitude toward psychical phenomena as evidencing the continuance of human existence after what we loosely call "death," certainly the intellectual and educational standing of many of those who testify in the affirmative compels respectful consideration of their utterances. The day has gone by—if ever there was such a day—when the skeptic could dismiss the alleged evidence of spiritualistic manifestations with offhand denial or an incredulous smile. In proof of which here are seven dignified volumes, written severally by eminent college professors—including a lecturer on mechanical engineering—doctors of medicine, a theologian, distinguished editors, and hard-headed scientists, all of whom offer what they consider convincing demonstration that life does not cease with the passing of breath from the physical body. Of course, each reader will have to decide for himself as to the value and credibility of the testimony presented, but no one can deny that, individually and collectively, the writers of these books make so strong a case that, were the subject not of such overmastering importance, disbelief would come little short of actual impertinence.

As was to be expected, Dr. Hyslop, in his new book, takes a most comprehensive view of the whole question of psychic existence, and, with commendable restraint, prefers rather to offer testimony than to draw dogmatical conclusions. In the opening chapter he shows that belief in a soul, as separate from the body, has been common to the human race from the earliest recorded periods, a belief shared by separate peoples who never have been in contact with each other, with only differences in detail due to their environment. He finds a resemblance to modern séances in the appearance of Samuel's ghost to the Witch of Endor, as related in the Bible, in the visibility of a man's kla, or soul, at his death to the wongman, or spirit doctor, in West Africa, that of ghosts to the shamans among the Finns, of Isaiah's "wizards that peep and mutter," and Shakespeare's ghosts that squeak and gibber. As evidence that there is a future life, the professor presents two classes of facts:

"(1) The uniform experience of the race from the earliest times which has given rise to its religions and belief in another life. (2) The recorded results of observation and experiment by the various Societies for Psychical Research. It is the latter facts," he says, "which have given credibility to human experience and tradition generally, after eliminating the influence of the imagination and superstition that had attached itself to the legends." In discussing the nature of a future life he admits that, having treated the hypothesis of survival as "scientifically proved," we may yet have very inadequate evidence regarding the conditions under which personal consciousness, after bodily death, continues its existence. "What we know of its bodily associations does not afford any clear indication of what it shall be apart from them."

In quotations from Sir Oliver Lodge's book, which tell of the experiences of Sir Oliver's son in the other world, as revealed at various séances, Professor Hyslop goes deeper into this most interesting matter. When the young man had "passed over," and had got over the momentary feeling of being in "a shadowy, vague place," he met his grandfather and other persons all of whom "appeared to be so solid that he could scarcely believe that he had passed over." The description of the son's experience on the other side goes on:

> He lives in a house—a house built of bricks—and there are trees and flowers, and the ground is solid. And if you kneel down in the mud, apparently you get your clothes soiled. * * * He says he doesn't want to eat now. But he sees some who do; he says they have to be given something which has all the appearance of an earth food. People here try to provide everything that is wanted. A chap came over the other day who would have a cigar. * * * They were able to manufacture what looked like a cigar. * * * The chap jumped at it. But when he began to smoke it he didn't think so much of it. He had four altogether, and now he doesn't look at one. They don't seem to get the same satisfaction out of it, so gradually it seems to drop from them. But when they first come they do want things. Some want meat, and some strong drink; they call for whisky sodas. Don't think I am stretching it, and I tell you that they can manufacture even that. But when they have had one or two they don't seem to want it so much—not those that are near here.

Commenting on this excerpt from Sir Oliver Lodge's book, Professor Hyslop admits, by inference, the triviality of the material, but insists that "a really scientific man will demand an explanation of the facts, whether he believes them or not." He continues:

> It is the quotation of statements about living in brick houses or having cigar manufactories in the spiritual world out of their context and without explanation of either their environment or the actual views of the author that creates all the trouble with the public, both with believers and with skeptics, neither of which class will take the trouble critically to read the facts. Let me take the first passage, about the brick house, and estimate it in the light of the hypothesis that the spiritual world may be a mental one and not to be measured by the conceptions of sense perception and their flavor of physical reality.

The professor proceeds to analyze the passage, and shows that the statement about the brick houses and cigars is not only reasonable, but illuminating, when read in a fair, detached mood, with a real desire to understand the supernatural conditions of which they are a part. This, by the way, is the temper of mind in which one must approach Professor Hyslop's own book to enjoy the full value of what is indubitably a most important work.

It is in a spirit of deep religious reverence that Sir W. Robertson Nicoll, in "Reunion in Eternity," considers the survival of the soul after bodily death. His main conclusions, as he states in his preface, are that "faithful souls pass in dying to the immediate presence of Jesus Christ," where they are "cleansed, enlightened, and perfected." Also, "they are carried into the heart of their desire in immediate reunion with their beloved who have gone before," where "they wait in peace for the Second Advent, the Resurrection, the Judgment." Beautifully written and inspired with a Christian faith in the hereafter that takes little account of psychic evidences as generally understood, this book is essentially comforting in its calm certainty of a greator life following the turmoil of our present existence.

Spiritualism, Psychic Research, Theosophy, Christian Science, and New Thought are discussed in Dr. Martin's book on "Psychic Tendencies of Today." Like Dr. Hyslop, he finds that many and varied psychic movements prevailed in ancient India, Egypt, Greece, Rome, and Palestine, and that all of them bore some resemblance to those of our own day. While the reasoning of Dr. Martin is always cogent and thoughtful, and therefore deserving of close consideration by all who read his book with an earnest desire to gain knowledge in a difficult field, there is no more significant passage in the entire work than this:

> In all probability coming generations will be disposed to attach great importance to the belief in a hereafter only as it shall be re-enforced by evidential means. Special significance therefore attaches to careful examination of whatever purports to be proof of human survival of death. True, nothing purporting to come from the dead has yet been accepted as genuine, except by a very small minority of the human race. But who will dare to say that nothing can come worthy to receive adoption by the majority of mankind? * * * There are many things about us of which we are ignorant, but because they have not been discovered it will not do to say they never can be. Because nothing generally satisfying has yet come from alleged intercourse with deceased persons, we dare not say nothing ever will come. * * * Not until the realm of terrene agencies has been fully and thoroughly employed dare we fall back on super-terrestial causes.

From a "popular" point of view, Dr. W. J. Crawford's "Hints and Observations," telling how modern spiritualistic séances are conducted, is the book that the curious in such matters probably will find the most interesting of the seven here considered. In his first paragraph Dr. Crawford declares bluntly that he is one of many thousands who believe that man survives death, that it is only his material body that dies, while the essential part of him—the spirit—lives on and functions in a new realm. "He does not alter his human characteristics because he passes through the change of death, but he is human in the new world, as he is in this." The other state of existence, the doctor thinks, is neither heaven nor hell, but, judging by what the "operators" tell us, it is a world just a little higher than our own as regards the moral status of its inhabitants. An "operator" in this work is a being "on the other side" who directs the phenomena at séances.

THE CUP of FURY

RUPERT HUGHES' GREATEST NOVEL

The situations mounting from one sensation to another keep the reader agog with thrills. The novel is, moreover, more than a novel of plot, as it is rich in varied and keen characterizations and sagacious observation and valid interpretations. It is written in Major Hughes's vigorous and vivid style, which means that it is picturesque, active and happily turned of phrase.—Philadelphia Ledger.

He tackles themes and situations and conditions that other writers fumble with or veer from. He is bold and he is sincere and gets more contemporary life into his pages than any other American novelist I know of.

BOOKS THAT TELL OF ANOTHER WORLD

Instructions are given as to the method of conducting a séance, indicating that the state of one's digestion has a greater influence psychically than is generally understood:

> During sittings the mind should be kept in a state of gentle relaxation—there should be no mental concentration. * * * No heavy meals should be partaken of for some hours before a séance. The members constituting the circle should assemble half an hour or so before sitting and listen to a little good music, played perhaps by one of them on the piano or organ. * * * The sitters should sit on wooden chairs—never on cushions if it can be avoided.

Dr. Crawford deplores the necessity of employing a human medium in our intercourse with the next state, but he thinks that this could be done away with by the invention of a purely instrumental medium, thereby removing one of the greatest stumbling-blocks to a general acceptance of the reality of the next life. He advocates the establishing of laboratories, thoroughly equipped with all the apparatus which experience shows to be necessary, and adds that "the field is so promising, and a successful conclusion to the search would have such a profound effect on the history of the world, that I have often marveled the necessary funds have not been forthcoming in abundance long ago."

The new edition of "Letters from Julia," under the title of "After Death," which letters were written by the hand of W. T. Stead, the eminent editor and psychical investigator who went down in the steamer Titanic, are mainly a reprint of matter familiar to most persons interested in psychic revelations. With it is the preface written by Mr. Stead in 1909, but which never has been published till now, together with fifteen new letters from Julia, which follow the lines of the others. It is Estelle W. Stead, his daughter, who is responsible for this new volume.

In "Realms of the Living Dead" the authors give an elaboration of their lectures delivered in 1915-16, together with lessons on the subject to the students of "The Order of Christian Mystics." The book is not materially different from the others grouped with it herewith, its most notable characteristic being its earnest religious atmosphere. It is the Christian hereafter that is described, with the classification of the Astral World on a scientific basis. The tendency of the work is well shown in this quotation from the chapter entitled "The Awakening":

> In the case of the majority of persons, the first emotion on awakening in the Astral World is an intense and weird loneliness, a confused consciousness of being surrounded by vague, shadowy forms, and of being watched by innumerable eyes, yet without the ability fully to formulate their thoughts or understand by whom or what they are watched. * * * It must be remembered that in the Astral World for a time they are in the same relative position as is a new-born babe when it first opens its eyes to earth life.

Miss H. A. Dallas's "Death, the Gate of Life?" is devoted mainly to communications of F. W. H. Myers from the spirit world through several mediums, these communications being all the more valuable because Mr. Myers was in life President of the Society for Psychical Research and would surely try now to bridge the gap between this world and the other if any discarnate spirit could accomplish the feat. There is nothing in this volume strikingly different from what one finds in the others that bear on the subject of intercourse between those who have passed over and their friends still in this world. It is merely one more witness to testify that such intercourse is not only possible but so frequent as to be accepted by many persons as a logical sequence to physical death.

Essays in Lent

Eight brief articles written by Hamilton Wright Mabie, and originally published in The Outlook, appear in a little volume entitled "Essays in Lent"; they really are short sermons in which the author makes graceful presentations of thoughts appropriate to the Lenten season. (E. P. Dutton & Co.)

THE WALKLEY COMPANY, Incorporated
Advertising
Three-Forty-One Fifth Avenue, New York City

July 30, 1919.

THE NEW YORK TIMES:

We have obtained most excellent results for our clients from want advertisements in The New York Times. There is one case in particular that is rather interesting and we take the liberty of bringing same to your attention.

Recently one of our clients desired to secure the services of several professional men. The positions open were responsible positions and the object in view was to reach only such men as were capable of doing big things in a big way. From the small "ads" which were published in your issue of July 27th we received 253 replies and 60 per cent. of the applicants were accepted by our client.

Considering that this was for professional service, and also that the work in question called for the highest type of efficiency, such results deserve commendation.
